Senate crushes gas tax filibuster

By WESLEY G. PIPPERT
United Press International

WASHINGTON — The Senate Monday crushed a conservative filibuster blocking action on President Reagan's proposed gasoline tax increase.

Members agreed to debate the measure today.

The vote was 75-13 to end the two-day filibuster that prevented Republican leader Howard Baker from bringing the highway-jobs measure to the Senate floor for consideration.

Two hours later, the small band of conservatives who had blocked action yielded to Baker's warning and agreed to stop their talkathon so that the bill might come up today.

Baker threatened to keep all senators on the floor continuously and "at best, cause a massive inconvenience" to force the conservatives to burn quickly all the time they were entitled to — and were using — after the cloture vote.

The filibuster leaders — Sens. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., Don Nickles, R-Okla., and Jesse Helms, R-N.C. — had talked during the afternoon and demanded quorum calls, a time-consuming parliamentary device, as part of their tactics.

Another freshman, Sen. John East, R-N.C., said the 5-cent a gallon increase was a regressive tax "that hits working people the hardest" during a recession, leaving people less money to spend on other things.

"Ultimately, I presume the majority will prevail and the American people will be paying a nickel a gallon more for their gasoline," East conceded.

After cloture has been voted, Senate rules give every senator one hour, rather than unlimited time to speak. It was this time the opponents proposed to use to delay a vote on bringing the bill to the Senate floor.

The Senate leadership is ready to seek limits on the debate of the bill itself if the conservatives start a new filibuster when it reaches the floor.

The bill would raise an estimated $5.5 billion a year, with 4 cents of the gasoline tax increase going to repair roads and bridges and 1 cent to mass transit systems — creating an estimated 320,000 jobs.

Jobs legislation has support of both parties, although Senate Democrats would fund theirs by limiting the 1983 income tax cut for people earning more than $50,000 a year and eliminating it for those over $65,000.

Nickles, Humphrey and Helms oppose the gasoline tax bill on grounds that it would extend the influence of labor unions over all federal contracts and may short-change rural areas.

The trucking industry is against the measure because it would increase taxes on their vehicles.

With nationwide unemployment at 10.8 percent, Senate Democrats have proposed spending $9.7 billion to create 600,000 jobs, including $6 billion for public works such as highways, bridges, and sewer and water projects.

House Democrats have attached a $5.4 billion jobs program to a resolution that must be passed by Friday to keep government agencies operating until regular appropriation bills are enacted. Its major items are $1 billion for community development grants for areas of high unemployment and $1 billion for jobs for persons who have been unemployed for a long time.

The House is scheduled to take up the continuing resolution today.

Harlan Flinn cleans up the remains of a fence that Edna Davis of Gooding smashed through Monday morning after losing control of her vehicle. Davis's car came to rest on a lawn at Falls Avenue West and Ostrander Street in Twin Falls. Monday morning's snow-slickened roads contributed to several traffic accidents in the area. Twin Falls police urge motorists to drive with extreme caution when the roads are snow- or ice-covered.

Income tax surcharge for Idaho?

By JON KINNEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A 10 percent surcharge on Idaho's personal income tax apparently is one of the solutions Gov. John Evans favors for resolving the state's revenue crisis.

Rep. Tom Stivers, R-Twin Falls, the newly elected speaker of the Idaho House, said Monday that he and other legislative leaders have received a package of proposals from the governor, outlining the measures that Evans would like the Legislature to enact to deal with the state's growing deficit.

Although Evans has made some of the proposals before, Stivers says the income-tax surcharge and a proposal to increase the state's corporate income tax, both for this year and next, are new recommendations from the governor.

Evans, a Democrat, still is pushing for the Legislature, dominated in both houses by Republicans, to hold a special session yet this year to deal with the state's revenue shortage for fiscal year 1983.

Estimates on the size of the deficit have varied from a low of around $45 million to $60 million or more.

According to Stivers, a decision on holding a special session probably will come this week.

Although the governor has the power to call a special session of the Legislature on his own, he has said previously that he will not do so without the agreement of legislative leaders — meaning Republicans. And Stivers indicated Monday that Evans will have to show a willingness to compromise if there is to be an extra session in the waning days of December.

Stivers will meet with Evans on Friday morning to discuss the situation, and the outcome should be known that afternoon. Stivers says that Evans initiated the meeting.

But prior to his meeting with the governor, Stivers and other GOP legislative leaders are scheduled to meet Wednesday evening in Boise to consider Evans' package and arrive at some other proposals to use as "bargaining chips."

In reacting to Evans' proposals Monday, Stivers said the GOP leaders are not opposed to a special session per se, but rather, they find the governor's proposed solutions one-sided.

"It's not so much being opposed to a special session," Stivers says. "The problem is, the governor has not listed any other alternatives than to do anything other than raise taxes, one way or another.

"If he does call a special session with just his proposals (on the agenda), with just his marketbasket, there's no way we can resolve this (the fiscal crisis) in just a couple of days," Stivers says.

"If we (the GOP) agreed to that (Evans' proposals), sure we could (finish in a few days), but it isn't going to work that way."

'Security' heist nets $8 million

By MARK MOONEY
United Press International

NEW YORK — Masked bandits climbed through a hole in the roof of a Bronx security firm, handcuffed a guard, and fled with "at least" $8 million.

That made it the largest cash robbery in U.S. history, officials said Monday.

Before leaving the Sentry Armored Car-Courier Co., thieves taunted officials by scrawling in the dust of a mirror, "Robbers were here. Ha Ha."

Officials disagreed on how much money was taken during the heist. Chief Frank Sullivan, commander of the Bronx detectives, said a late count of the missing money put the loss at $8.3 million. He also indicated the thieves left behind another $20 million.

But FBI and Sentry officials said the take was closer to $8 million.

A Sentry spokesman said "at least $8 million" was taken. He also denied $20 million was left behind.

"No way. There wasn't that much here," the official said. "I would say they probably cleaned out 75 percent." The remainder was mostly bags of coins, he said.

Either figure would make the robbery the largest cash holdup in the nation's history.

Police and FBI spokesmen said two men wearing ski masks and armed with shotguns entered the Sentry Armored Car-Courier depot in the Bronx after cutting a hole in the roof of the two-story building about 11:15 p.m. Sunday.

The pair seized the armed guard at gunpoint and handcuffed him to a stairway railing, police said. The guard, who was alone on duty inside the building and watching television in a second floor room, was not injured.

Authorities said the robbers "subverted" an alarm system in the room where the cash was stored and turned security cameras in the building to the ceiling.

The pair used a crowbar and bolt cutters to break through a door and then cut through a steel mesh fence that surrounded the room where the money was stored in bags, police said.

Authorities said the cash included weekend commercial receipts, including about $900,000 in mostly small bills from Yonkers Raceway. The haul also included cash from the Federal Reserve Bank earmarked for delivery to area banks and cash picked up from banks for delivery to the Fed.

Police said the bandits loaded the cash into a vehicle, possibly a truck, that was brought to the rear of the building. Officials said the robbers must have filled the vehicle because a small mountain of cash was left behind.

Investigators were trying to determine if anyone else was involved.

"It was a grab what you can and go operation," said Lance Mead, a vice president at Sentry, a 15-year-old firm, which immediately posted a $25,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the robbers.

FBI nabs suspect in Tylenol deaths in library

By MOLLY CARRUTH
United Press International

NEW YORK — James W. Lewis, wanted for questioning in seven cyanide-laced Tylenol slayings in the Chicago area, was arrested Monday at the New York Public Library and held on $5 million bail.

The FBI said there was no evidence to link Lewis to the killings, but Illinois Attorney General Tyrone Fahner described him as a suspect "high on our lists."

With the fugitive in custody, FBI Deputy Assistant Director Kenneth Walton appealed to Lewis' wife, Leann, 35, to surrender. She is wanted on a fugitive warrant for felonious use of a Social Security card.

Lewis was arraigned before Magistrate Ruth Washington in U.S. District Court in Manhattan on a fugitive warrant and ordered held on $5 million cash bail for a hearing Dec. 23.

During the proceeding, Lewis refused to answer questions, even when asked his name.

The search for Lewis, 36, wanted for trying to extort $1 million from Johnson & Johnson, distributors of Extra-Strength Tylenol, came to an end about noon MST after "someone called and said there's a look-alike for Lewis" at the library annex on Fifth Avenue, Walton said.

"He offered no resistance. He admits to his identity," Walton said, adding the area was "saturated" with wanted posters.

He said Lewis was copying addresses of newspapers from a reference book when arrested by FBI agents. Since he was named as a suspect in the extortion attempt, Lewis has written letters to the Chicago Tribune and the Kansas City Star.

Chicago FBI spokesman Tony DiLorenzo said the agency circulated wanted posters of Lewis to libraries because they believed that was where he read copies of the Chicago Tribune. That suspicion was based on the fact Lewis' letters to the newspaper referred to specifics in its stories, officials said.

"We knew he (Lewis) was getting copies of the Chicago Tribune and we knew he wasn't getting it from newsstands," DiLorenzo said. "So the logical place was from the public library. We saturated the libraries with wanted flyers."

Lewis, who once had a beard, was clean-shaven, casually dressed and wearing wire-rimmed glasses, Walton said, adding the fugitive apparently had made no special attempt to disguise his appearance.

Walton stressed "there is no evidence that directly links him to the Tylenol murders," and said Lewis was arrested for the extortion attempt after unlawful flight to avoid prosecution for a charge in Kansas.

'Cracks' trace dark lines over surface of Europa, one of Jupiter's moons

Jupiter moon could sustain life

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Europa, an ice-covered moon of the planet Jupiter, may be able to support life, space agency scientists said Monday.

It would be extremely primitive life — the kind that could survive under the polar icecaps on Earth, and it would probably have to be transported to Europa from Earth.

But the National Aeronautics and Space Administration scientists told a meeting of the American Geophysical Union the "proposed new locale apparently does not have some of the drawbacks for life of various locations on Mars or Jupiter."

Scientists searching Mars and Jupiter for a place where life could be sustained have been discouraged because those planets seem to be hostile to any form of life that exists on Earth.

Steven Squyres and Ray Reynolds of NASA's Ames Research Center said they believe "some low forms of Earth life could be transplanted, and might well survive in the suspected oceans of Jupiter's planet-sized moon, Europa."

The environment on Europa, which is slightly smaller than the Earth's moon, is deduced from spacecraft photographs and other measurements. The scientists said this evidence "appears to make a strong case" for the Jupiter moon as a potential site for transplanted life from Earth.

The evidence indicates that Europa is totally covered by a layer of ice three miles thick, covering an ocean 30 miles deep.

The scientists said enough sunlight could penetrate the ice coating to support organisms such as those found "under the permanent ice of Earth's Antarctic lakes."

They said the deep water under the layer of ice apparently is kept from freezing by the radioactive decay in the planet's rocky interior, plus heat from the tidal forces of giant Jupiter's gravity as well as sunlight.

The space agency said the latest pictures of Europa show it as perfectly smooth, "like a huge, white billiard ball, netted with a pattern of hemisphere-spanning dark lines."

The dark lines appear to be cracks in the ice caused by gravitation forces, the researchers said.

Reynolds suggested that the ice coating is continually cracking this way and that the cracks expose the water below to direct sunlight.

"Such ice windows should let in enough sunlight to support known Earth organisms for five to 10 years before ice becomes too thick for light passage," NASA said in reporting the findings of Squyres and Reynolds.

Grain proposal receives OK

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

WASHINGTON — A proposal to give government-owned grain to farmers who sharply reduce their production next year was approved Monday by the Senate Agriculture Committee.

The committee action to endorse the "payment in kind" proposal advanced by Agriculture Secretary John Block was the first step toward putting a new farm program in place within a few weeks.

Under the proposal, farmers who idle anywhere from 20 percent to all of their crop land in 1983 would be paid a specified amount of corn, wheat, rice or cotton from government stockpiles.

Actress slightly injured

OLD SAYBROOK, Conn. (UPI) — Academy award winning actress Katharine Hepburn, 73, and her secretary were slightly injured Monday when their car struck a pole on a rural road near her Connecticut home, police said.

Miss Hepburn, and her secretary, Phyllis Wilbourn, were first taken to the Shoreline Clinic in Essex and then transferred to Hartford Hospital.

A Hartford Hospital spokesman said the actress was admitted at 3:15 p.m. in good condition with a fractured right ankle and Ms. Wilbourn was also admitted for treatment of a broken right wrist and a shoulder injury.

Truckers threaten to strike

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The head of the Independent Truckers Association Monday predicted truckers will stage a nationwide strike if Congress approves a tax hike for truck drivers as part of a highway-repair package that includes a gas tax increase.

"If they pass this legislation, there will be (a shutdown) and we will endorse a nationwide truckers' strike," Michael Parkhurst, president of the 40,000-member truckers union, said at a news conference.

He said truck drivers planned to gather at truck stops throughout the country beginning Monday night and run convoys along the highways to protest the tax plan.

Zia flays rights activists

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Pakistani President Mohammad Zia Ul-Haq denounced claims Monday of human rights violations in his nation but admitted "flogging" still exists as a remnant of British colonial rule.

Zia delivered a luncheon speech to 600 people at the World Affairs Council before ending his U.S. visit and heading for Canada.

Budget decisions start today

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan meets with top advisers today to begin making final decisions on a fiscal 1984 budget likely to call for $26 billion in domestic spending cuts and produce a deficit of some $155 billion.

Reagan, facing one of his busiest weeks, sandwiched a series of budget review sessions into a schedule filled with holiday social events, meetings with foreign leaders and lobbying for his legislative priorities in Congress.

Administration and congressional sources said Monday the preliminary figures prepared for the meetings, in which Reagan also may hear appeals of earlier proposals, call for $26 billion in domestic spending cuts, $14 billion in revenue increases and a $155 billion deficit.

Burglary suspects arrested

BOISE (UPI) — Police have arrested two Boise men in connection with a weekend burglary at a ski lodge at the Bogus Basin resort.

Boise police Sgt. Dave Ingle said that William Williams and Peter Magel, both 21, were arrested early Sunday, hours after burglars broke into several vending machines and cash drawers at the lodge.

Ingle said a lodge custodian reported the theft about 5 a.m. He said lawmen set up a roadblock at the end of the Bogus Basin road, and arrested two men in a car fitting the description of the vehicle allegedly used by the burglars.

The defendants were being held in the Ada County Jail.

Candy sale labeled fraud

BOISE (UPI) — Officials at Bishop Kelly High School in Boise have complained to local law-enforcement agencies that two youths are selling candy fraudulently, door to door, by telling people they represent the school in a charitable fund-raising activity.

Mike Fritz, the dean of students at the Catholic high school, said Monday that authorities were notified of the problem after several Bolseans called Bishop Kelly to check out the sales pitch being used by the two young men.

Drinking age raised to 21

TRENTON, N.J. (UPI) — The New Jersey Assembly Monday night gave final approval to legislation to increase the drinking age from 19 to 21, an action cheered by those gathered in the Assembly gallery.

Gov. Thomas Kean has promised to sign the legislation, which would take effect Jan. 1. The vote was 48 to 26, with 41 votes needed for passage.

Today's weather

More snow could arrive late today

Twin Falls, Jerome-Gooding, Burley-Rupert areas:

Some morning fog today with increasing clouds. Chance of snow by late afternoon with southerly winds 15 mph. Highs mid 30s, lows near 30.

Camas Prairie, Hailey, Wood River valley:

Fog and increasing clouds with chance of snow showers in the afternoon. Still more snow showers are predicted for tonight and Wednesday, heavy at times in the mountains. Highs 30s both days, lows 20s.

Northern Nevada and Utah:

Variable clouds in Nevada today and Wednesday with chance of rain or snow. Utah shows fog and low clouds today and Wednesday.

Synopsis:

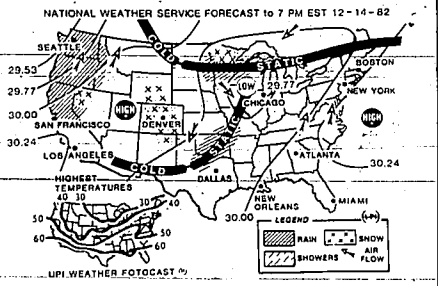
A traveler's advisory was in effect in southeast Idaho Monday night due to blowing and drifting snow. Travelers were warned of slippery roads and low visibility.

A winter storm crossed Idaho Sunday night, but conditions improved Monday as the heaviest snowfall moved on into Montana, Wyoming and Utah.

A new Pacific frontal system will spread a band of clouds and precipitation into northern and western portions of Idaho this afternoon. It will be windy at times with scattered snow showers in most areas of the state but it may be either rain or snow in the lower valleys of southwest Idaho.

Fog reduced visibility in many areas of Idaho Monday. Visibility in Boise was zero for about three hours.

The heaviest snowfall Monday morning was in the panhandle region. Bovill measured 6 inches and Moscow 4 inches. Heavy snow also fell in surrounding states — 6 inches at Spokane, 4 at Ontario, and by midafternoon Salt Lake City had 8 inches at the airport, with snow continuing to fall.



Low temperatures Monday morning were generally in the 20s. Fairfield reported the coldest with minus 8. Dixie had 2, Bovill 4 and Powell 6. Boise and Hagerman each had 40 degrees for the warmest in the state.

Elsewhere in the nation Monday, the warmest temperature of 80 degrees was recorded at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., while Berlin, N.H., had the low of 16 degrees below zero.

Reagan awaiting actions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Reagan administration will not move to lift economic and political sanctions against Poland until the Warsaw government takes "specific action" to ease martial law, a White House spokesman said Monday.

"We'll be watching and waiting to see what the Polish government does," deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said, indicating a U.S. desire for deeds — not words.

Poland's military regime said Monday all political prisoners will be released by Christmas and the major provisions of martial law most likely would be suspended Dec. 31.

The announcement came exactly a year after martial law was imposed to crush the Independent Solidarity labor union.

Speakes told reporters President Reagan knows only what the Warsaw regime's "announced intentions are," and wants to see concrete and significant moves before normalizing relations.

He said Reagan is standing by his three conditions for improving relations with Poland: an end to martial law, release of all political prisoners and the start of a dialogue among the military rulers and "truly representative forces of the Polish nation" including the Catholic Church and free trade union leaders.

A senior administration official said Danish Prime Minister Poul Schluter and Reagan agreed at a meeting Monday that the Atlantic Alliance "should study carefully the actions the Polish authorities are taking to determine what, if any, way they represent a true restoration of human rights to the Polish people."

Speakes said the United States will consider "the total picture and make decisions on it."

Polish military chief Wojciech Jaruzelski announced Sunday that martial law would be suspended by year's end. Jaruzelski said the Military Council "is of the opinion that conditions have arisen for suspending martial law."

The recent release of Solidarity leader Lech Walesa apparently signaled the start of a gradual liberalization of yearlong repressive measures taken to break the free labor movement.

The U.S. sanctions included suspension of Poland's most favored nation trade status. Sanctions against Moscow for its role in the crackdown included banning Soviet flights to the United States, reducing freedom of Soviet ships to call at U.S ports and postponing new grain talks.

First lady unveils yule tree

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Nancy Reagan unveiled the "magical" White House Christmas decorations Monday, launched the yuletide party season and owned up to a kiss under the mistletoe.

Mrs. Reagan gave the president a private preview of the ceiling-high glittering "old-fashioned" Christmas tree late Sunday, and said he kissed her under the mistletoe ball in the doorway of the Grand Foyer.

The president, she said, thought the tree was beautiful, and both of them love the decorations. "We think it is quite magical," she said during a press tour.

The Reagans arranged to host a series of receptions, starting with two parties Monday — one for the children of the diplomatic corps, featuring the stars from the Broadway show "Annie," and a reception for members of Congress and their families.

The 18½ foot fir tree in the Blue Room was decorated by 20 volunteers from Second Genesis, an area drug treatment center for youth, who worked for six weeks, cutting out thousands of silver and gold metallic snowflakes and wrapping 100 pounds of California walnuts in lace.

In addition, there are six trees and a 15th Century creche decorated with tiny sparkling white lights in the East Room, and a gingerbread house with a jelly bean wishing-well in the State Dining Room. Hundreds of white and red poinsettia plants also decorate the rooms.

A huge green wreath with a red ribbon hangs on the door of the Oval Office.

Mrs. Reagan wore a royal blue jersey blouse and a plaid skirt when she took reporters on a tour of the rooms. She said she already has put in her Christmas gift request — "a warm sweater" to wear at Camp David and their mountaintop ranch near Santa Barbara.

But she was not about to tell what she plans to give the president. "I'm just happy to know what he needs," she said. "It will be very practical."

Mrs. Reagan said she has done most of her shopping by telephone and by mail, and still has some buying to do.

"I happen to love Christmas," she said, making it clear she is a traditionalist who doesn't like "a white tree with purple balls."

Knigge calls for special session of Legislature

FILER (UPI) — Rep. Lawrence Knigge, R-Filer, has called for a special legislative session, saying lawmakers must quickly find a solution to an expected shortfall in the state's unemployment insurance trust fund.

Knigge said Monday he agreed with Democratic Gov. John Evans that legislators should deal with growing fiscal problems before the official start of the 1983 session next month.

Evans has stopped short of calling the session because legislative leaders have said little would be accomplished in the extra meetings.

Knigge said he was most concerned about predictions that the unemployment fund will run out of money this year and will have to borrow from the federal government.

The Republican said he was concerned about a suggested solution that would require employers to increase the amount they contribute to the fund.

Utah area leads in births, Reno in divorces

New book lists U.S. census 'firsts'

By ELIOT BRENNER
United Press International

WASHINGTON — A huge new Census Bureau book published Monday pulls together a world of information on the nation's biggest cities, ranging from racial composition and divorce rate to ages and income.

The 611-page "State and Metropolitan Area Data Book, 1982" provides a wealth of rankings for the more than 300 Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas and reflects a host of census trends, including the large numbers of blacks and Hispanics who live in urban areas.

Much of the information, a great deal of it from the 1980 census, already had been published. But the book provides city-by-city rankings in many areas for the first time:

•Reno, Nev., perhaps because of Nevada law, ranked first in 1979 in marriage and divorce rates per 1,000 population.

•The nation's highest birth rate was in the Provo-Orem, Utah, area where there are large concentrations of Mormon families.

•The highest death rate was in Bradenton, Fla., which ranked No. 2 in percentage of the population age 65 and older. Sarasota, Fla., another popular retirement area, ranked first in elderly population and second in the death rate.

•Ranking first in welfare recipients was Visalia-Tulare-Porterville, Calif.

•The Anchorage, Alaska, area had the highest level of per capita income.

The book said of the more than 188 million people living in the 305 urban areas of the nation in 1980, whites comprised 81.5 percent of the population, blacks accounted for 12.7 percent of city-dwellers, and Hispanics accounted for 7.6 percent. The percentages total more than 100 because "uncorrected race totals" were used to calculate the numbers in connection with corrected total population figures, the document said in a footnote.

The metropolitan area of Albany, Ga., has the highest percentage of black residents, 40.8 percent, it said.

Of the largest metropolitan areas, Wausau, Wis., ranked lowest in percentages of blacks and Hispanics to total population, the report said.

Although the District of Columbia is 70.3 percent black, it is included in a metropolitan area along with predominantly white Maryland and Virginia suburbs and blacks make up 27.9 percent of the overall population.

The area including the nation's capital ranks 29th nationwide in percentage of black population and 22nd in Hispanic population.

Ranking second in the percentage of blacks to all residents was Pine Bluff, Ark., followed by the Memphis, Tenn.-Ark.-Miss., area; Chicago; Florence, S.C.; Petersburg-Colonial Heights-Hopewell, Va.; Savannah, Ga.; Columbus, Ga.-Ala.; Montgomery, Ala., and Shreveport, La.

The metropolitan area with the largest percentage of Hispanic residents was the California area of Los Angeles-Long Beach, where Hispanics total 27.6 percent of the population.

Blacks acquire motel

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) — Black businessmen who want to convert the site of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s 1968 assassination into a civil rights memorial bought the Lorraine Motel Monday at auction for $144,000.

Auctioneer Raymond Taggart used a microphone so a crowd of about 100 people at the southwest corner of the Shelby County Courthouse could hear his sing-song call.

In five minutes it was over.

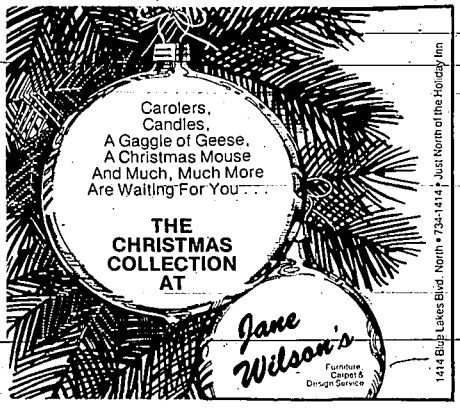
The crowd erupted in a wave of cheering as the last bid was accepted from attorney D'Army Bailey, representing the Martin Luther King-Memphis Memorial Foundation.

The group's fund-raising effort totaled less than $100,000 prior to the auction, which was postponed two months by a bankruptcy judge to allow the foundation more time to solicit donations.

"We're going to have to borrow about $50,000 to complete the sale," said Bailey, who almost stopped bidding at $142,000.

A 15 percent deposit in earnest money was required after the sale, with the remainder of the purchase price due in cash within 24 hours.

"We're very happy," said Bailey. "It gives us an opportunity to take a very significant contribution to the city and honor a hero in the worldwide community. We're very excited about it."



'Summit' on Social Security appears unlikely

WASHINGTON (UPI) — With no White House summit planned to break the Social Security logjam, House Speaker Thomas O'Neill said Monday he will start selling Congress on proposals made by Democratic members of a stalled presidential commission.

Key members of the National Commission on Social Security Reform, saying they have gone as far as they can without high-level political guidance, want Democrat O'Neill and President Reagan to agree on how to bail out the system.

The panel is split into political camps on how much to raise payroll taxes and cut benefits up to the $200 billion it estimates Social Security needs by 1990.

The commission, whose report is due by Dec. 31, last week postponed a final vote until Friday.

Both O'Neill and a spokesman for Reagan discouraged talk Monday of a summit or behind-the-scenes agreement.

"There are no plans for the president to meet with Speaker O'Neill," White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters. "We'll have to wait and see whether it will be arranged in the future."

"The president and myself are probably not going to reach an agreement now," O'Neill said. He said he has had no contact with Reagan, and there have been no talks "to my knowledge" between House and White House staff.

He said he would be "glad to go" to the White House if Reagan asks, but indicated he does not expect a call.

"I will be going forward with the recommendations my Democrats (on the commission) have given me and hope we could sell it to the House," O'Neill told reporters.

"I would expect we would put something on his (Reagan's) desk he would be able to sign," he said.

The commission's minority Democrats have proposed $136 billion in payroll tax hikes, limited taxes on benefits, a three-month delay in next year's cost-of-living increase and requiring new federal workers to join Social Security. Republicans say the tax hikes are too high.

MX fence consensus growing

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate probably will give President Reagan the MX missile production funds he urgently wants, but clamp a hold on the money until Congress approves a basing plan next year, leaders said Monday.

"One way or the other we'll have funding for the MX," Senate Republican leader Howard Baker told reporters. "The real question is if the money will be fenced."

Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd said there is a "growing consensus" on the Democratic side "that we fund the missile production, but that we fence it."

The president, meantime, kept up his personal hard-sell campaign to save the MX, calling various senators to ask for their support. He set aside an hour for morning phone calls to lawmakers and reserved another in the afternoon for possible meetings.

The House voted 245-176 last Tuesday to delete the $988 million in production money for the intercontinental nuclear missiles, largely because of unhappiness with Reagan's controversial "dense-pack" basing plan for putting the MX in closely spaced silos in Wyoming.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes Monday predicted a close vote in the Senate, but indicated the White House is more hopeful than it was after the stunning defeat in the House last week.

"Certainly it's do-able," Speakes said. "It's within reach."

Groups seek fund block

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Thirteen religious, arms control and environmental groups Monday asked the Senate to follow the lead of the House and block production funds for the MX missile system.

The groups, which aided the lobbying effort that resulted in last week's House vote denying President Reagan $988 million in MX production funds, accused the administration of "trying to fuzz the issue in advance of the Senate vote."

"The president is trotting out the old gimmick of getting the MX's 'camel's nose' under the tent so that next year he can argue that it is vital to appropriate additional MX funds," the groups said in a letter to each senator.

Groups signing the letter included: the United Church of Christ, American Baptist Churches, Friends Committee on National Legislation, Council for A Livable World, Union of Concerned Scientists, Americans for Democratic Action, Coalition for a New Foreign and Military Policy, Greenpeace, SANE, National Association of Social Workers, Network, and Friends of the Earth.

Classroom no place for prayer sessions

Joann Bell and Lucille McCord are not the sort of individuals you'd expect to be leading a challenge to weekly prayer sessions authorized by the Little Axe, Okla., school board a year ago and conducted regularly in the district's schools.

Both women come from conservative backgrounds and have fundamentalist religious beliefs. Yet, they are in federal district court in Oklahoma City, arguing that they do not want their children exposed to religion at school, and that the school district has no business establishing weekly "sharing" sessions in the schools.

We think they are right. The framers of the American Constitution wisely built a high wall between church and state, not because they were afraid that the government would harm religious expression, but because they feared a theocratic state.

America at that time was a religious nation, but it was not a church state. It was a nation formed of immigrants from all across the world, many of whom were fleeing church states in which their private religions were discriminated against. The experience of the Puritans, fleeing Anglican England, is the best known case in point.

By the end of the 1700s, when the Constitution was written, America had become, in effect, a pluralistic religious nation. That religious diversity and freedom has been one of the great beacons to the rest of the world. It remains one of our great strengths as a people.

Despite the deeply held religious beliefs of many Americans, we agree with the two Oklahoma parents' challenge that the public school is not the place for organized religious activity that promotes a specific faith.

Most of us are Christians, but should the schools foster that religion ahead of all others? We think not. The places for such activities are churches, which each of us can choose at will.

Reflecting that principle, the U.S. Supreme Court has held, in a series of rulings, that religious activities cannot be conducted in public schools if the practices advance or benefit religion or entangle the school directly in religious practices.

In the Oklahoma case, school officials admit the sessions are religious in nature and advance Christianity specifically. That should make the issue a strictly constitutional one and the probable outcome clear.

Can Reagan get too much exposure?

WASHINGTON — There is an eternal controversy over television exposure that has whirled about every American president since Dwight Eisenhower.

The key question is: How often, and in what ways, can a president appear in person on television without becoming shopworn and overexposed?

This has been a particularly fertile internal debate within the Reagan White House, because of the president's legendary reputation as "the great communicator."

A faction of the president's staff and outside advisers have long argued that the administration would have been much more successful if Reagan himself had gone "to the people" on television much more often.

"He's always been his own most effective advocate, and we should should put him out there (on television) more often," a frustrated administration aide said recently.

But still another faction has insisted that even a charismatic, personable chief executive such as Reagan can easily wear out his impact if he goes to the public too often.

This viewpoint is generally held by White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III and Deputy Chief of Staff Michael K. Deaver. And Deaver, in particular, is enormously influential in all matters having to do with Reagan's schedule, including his exposure to the news media.

White House Commnications Director David Gergen, architect of the presidential image, is another who urges using Reagan sparingly. He speaks from the wisdom of earlier experience on the staff of Presidents Nixon and Ford.

This has made Gergen uncomfortably controversial in internal White House politics. Though his approach on this matter is usually the same as Baker's and Deaver's, he is easier to pick on for critics from the other faction who might not dare to openly criticize his powerful superiors.

The debate over Reagan's exposure has quieted somewhat now that the pressure of the fall campaigns is past.

But it now seems destined to heat up again, thanks to a remarkable proposal made last week by one of the president's most influential friends, Republican Sen. Paul Laxalt of Nevada.

The senator's views carry extra weight because he has been asked by the president to serve as "general chairman" of the Republican National Committee, overseeing the party machinery and preparations for the 1984 presidential race.

Laxalt has thus formally been made a key strategist, as well as a personal intimate.

And one of his first moves in that role was to strongly recommend that the president go on television much more often, in the role of a sort of supersalesman for big-ticket investments — homes, U.S.-made automobiles and heavy appliances.

"Millions of people are waiting to buy a car or appliance or home because they think they can get a better deal later," Laxalt told the New York Times. "I think the president should address people and say: 'You're part of this. The (economic) program can't move forward unless you have the confidence to go out and buy that TV or car or home.'"

That suggestion already has caused concern in some parts of the White House, where it is felt that Laxalt's scheme would not only overexpose the president, but present him as an undignified huckster.

Also, there is always the related worry about using the president's personal advocacy in efforts that aren't necessarily going to be successful.

There is the danger that Reagan might aggressively try to promote a burst of consumerism, but that economic conditions beyond his control might doom the effort from the start. The president would then look impotent, and his failure might feed into a more general erosion of his clout with the public.

"We already have to put the president out there against tough odds a lot," one aide says. "It doesn't serve anyone well to bite off something else he might not be able to chew."

But — count on it — the idea will be carefully considered by Reagan so long as Paul Laxalt is for it.

A wish list for the woman who has almost everything

BOSTON — What with it being the Christmas season and all, I felt it my duty to come up with a catalog of gift ideas for the Woman Who Has Everything.

No, I am not talking about the woman who already has a pasta attachment for her Cuisinart, and the complete works of Neiman-Marcus.

I am talking about the Woman Who Has Everything, the Woman Who Has It All, in 1982 terms. She is proud owner of a home, job, children, as Zorba the Greek said, "the whole catastrophe."

To this end, I interviewed an assortment of WWHEs around my turf. What they do NOT want for Christmas is a bottle of stress vitamins or a ticket to a seminar on how to manage time (they don't have the time to go). Nor do they want a book about women who juggle their lives skillfully without dropping the guilt ball on their foot.

What I discovered is herewith presented as consensus on the dozen most popular items. This tentative gift list should come in particularly handy for employers, families, communities and Friends of the WWHE.

(1) A Wife. A perennial favorite among both single and two-parent families, the full-time "wife" heads the list again this year. While one woman qualified her response by requesting one of the "contented" variety, another confessed that she would settle for a "Stepford" model.

(2) Mary Poppins. Full-time wives being in short supply, several members of the survey dropped back immediately to request the world's most famous child-care server, preferably at her original wage.

(3) A parent-sensitive school system. This particular school system (models are available in our catalog) has hours which more or less coincide with the working day, parent-teacher conferences which may be scheduled before or after work, and a school policy which announces "no school" days only in case of an imminent tidal wave.

(4) A professional "neighbor." This creature will be happy to hang around for the people who repair and deliver the essentials of our life. Especially those who guarantee to show up "sometime." We chose this gift item because of all those wonderful folk who ask us: "Can't we leave it (a key, pet canary, refrigerator) with your neighbor?"

(5) A service industry. In lieu of a "neighbor," we would be willing to accept a service industry which picks up, delivers and repairs, not according to its truck route, but according to our hours.

(6) A four-day work week with a five-day paycheck and benefits. (What's a Santa Clause for?)

(7) Meals on Wheels. This service would arrive with varied nutritious items, not to mention napkins, for our evening dining pleasure. It would return in the morning for the dishes.

(8) A telephone arbitrator. A novelty item on this list, we have chosen a para-legal service to arbitrate the after-school disputes of children at home. The ones who otherwise call the office. The arbitrator would be available through an 800 number and could also operate as a message center.

(9) Child sick days. Most WWHEs in our survey admitted that they go to work when they are sick in order to stay home when their children are sick. Our catalog-selection committee therefore chose a Scandinavian import: a certified number of sick days to be legally used either for parents or kids.

(10) A convenience store. Most stores currently open for our "convenience" allow the WWHE to run out at 11:30 at night for milk. With the aid of a catalog and a telephone, the true convenience store will deliver anything from towels to typewriter ribbons.

(11) A three-act lunch. Our gift parade would never be complete without a pitch for a boss who was as tolerant of time off for school plays as for business lunches.

(12) An Un-Helpful Husband. While in Christmases past the helpful husband was an extremely popular number, this year most of the WWHEs surveyed wanted one of those handy new models on the market: a Sharing Husband; or, better yet, a Working Father.

So much for the list. Needless to say, some of these gifts would be equally popular with women who work at home and Men Who Have Everything. I should also mention other suggestions: A doctor who keeps to his appointment schedule, a machine that washes, dries, and sorts socks while it vacuums — that sort of thing. But one mustn't be greedy.

Indeed if all else fails, the Woman Who Has Everything will settle for one simple present: a 28-hour day. After all, it's Christmas.

Private social security makes sense, but won't pass

WASHINGTON — Let us suppose, to be supposing, that you are under the age of 35, that you have a job in private employment, and that you were offered an opportunity to opt out of the Social Security System. Under any one of several plans now fermenting in the Washington think tanks, it would be a deal you couldn't refuse.

I recently reported on one such plan, put forward by the National Taxpayers Legal Fund in a concise and cogent publication. The leading authority on "privatizing" the retirement functions of Social Security is Peter J. Ferrara, who has set forth his ideas in two books for the Cato Institute. The Heritage Foundation and the recently formed Family Security Foundation are pushing Ferrara's proposition. A. Haeworth Robertson, former chief actuary for Social Security, advanced his own version in a book last year.

Candor compels me to say that this is an idea whose time probably has not yet come. Both political parties seem wedded to patching the wounds of Social Security with legislative Band-Aids. It is highly unlikely that the presidential commission on Social Security will even consider the private alternative. Let us have no illusions that Capitol Hill will be struck any time soon by lightning bolts of intelligence and foresight.

But eventually the time will come for the private option. Our present system is on a collision course with arithmetical and demographic realities. One day the productive labor force will rebel against a flawed program in which millions of retirees get something for relatively nothing, while millions of others get nothing for relatively something.

The various pending proposals have certain elements in common. First, persons now retired or about to retire would be assured of collecting Social Security benefits on the existing schedule — subject, of course, to whatever Band-Aid modifications the Congress might impose. Second, workers over the age of, say, 35 or 38 would be given a choice — stay in, or opt out.

Third (and this is the key element), workers under a certain age would be embraced in a new system entirely. These workers and their employers would continue to pay the equivalent of Social Security taxes, but these payments would not go to the U.S. Treasury. They would go into individual private retirement accounts administered by banks, insurance companies or savings and loan institutions.

In his most recent book, Ferrara projects the examples of an 18-year-old who never earns more than a minimum wage, a 22-year-old who earns average wages, and a 24-year-old who pays taxes on the maximum covered earnings. Applying a conservative real rate of return of 6 percent, this is what private retirement accounts would produce at age 65:

The worker on minimum wage would accumulate a fund of $288,000 — enough to purchase an annuity of $28,000 a year for the rest of his life. Social Security would pay him only $10,800 a year.

The average worker would accumulate a fund of $470,000. He could leave the principal intact for his children and draw interest income of $28,000 a year, or he could purchase an annuity that would pay him $46,000 a year for life plus $30,500 a year for his surviving spouse.

The maximum income worker would amass a retirement fund of $1,000,000 at age 65. His interest income alone would be $60,000 a year. Social Security, by contrast, would pay him only $23,326 while both he and his spouse were alive, with $15,500 a year for the survivor.

The several versions of a private option plan differ in detail. In one approach, a part of the young worker's payments would go to his retirement account and another part to a fund for health, hospitalization and disability insurance. Under another version, bonds would be issued to help finance the existing Social Security system through a 30-year transition period.

The most appealing aspect of the approach is that it offers young workers something tangible, untouchable and bequeathable at retirement age. Their retirement accounts are personal, not impersonal. Their benefits are not dependent upon congressional whim. The private option offers a good deal for the next generation. Social Security can't do that.

High court strikes down church veto over liquor sale

By BARBARA ROSEWICZ
United Press International

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, for the same reason it cracked down on prayer in public schools, Monday struck down a Massachusetts zoning law that gave churches the power to veto liquor sales in their neighborhoods.

The justices, 8-1, upheld a ruling that the law — similar to ones in nine other states — violates the First Amendment because it entangles government and religion.

"Few entanglements could more offensive to the spirit of the Constitution," Chief Justice Warren Burger wrote for the court.

The law, he said, illegally "enmeshes churches in the processes of government." The court used the same rationale of separation of church and state to strike down organized school prayer in the 1960s.

Justice William Rehnquist cast the only dissenting vote Monday.

"The heavy First Amendment artillery that the court fires at this sensible and unobjectionable (law) is both unnecessary and unavailing," Rehnquist said.

In their last day on the bench before a four-week holiday break, the justices also:

WARREN BURGER
Cites First Amendment

•Acting in a water rights dispute between New Mexico and Colorado, ruled 9-0 that a state seeking to use water must show the benefits of diverting it clearly outweigh the harm that might result.

•Saved Xerox Corp. from paying $260,000 in property taxes in Texas, ruling 8-1 that local taxes cannot be charged on foreign-bound goods only temporarily stored in the United States.

•Upheld 6-3 a federal court's authority in a voting rights case to order changes in the system of electing city commissioners in Port Arthur, Texas.

•Ruled 9-0, in a case involving the National Right to Work Committee, that corporate funds may not be used to solicit contributions for political action committees.

•Agreed to look into whether states can garnishee a worker's vacation trust fund benefits to collect delinquent income taxes.

Under the Massachusetts liquor law, a church, synagogue or school could keep a liquor license from being issued to bars, restaurants and stores within a 500-foot radius by making a written objection.

Other states that permit churches or school to block liquor licenses are Arizona, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, Vermont and Washington. Guam also has a similar law.

Legislative solution to gas crisis in works

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Reagan administration is likely to unveil a major legislative proposal early next year aimed at resolving the natural gas pricing crisis, Energy Secretary Donald Hodel said Monday.

In an interview, Hodel said the administration's energy policymakers are now "attempting to present a series of options to the president with regard to what kind of legislation we should come forward with."

The new energy secretary made the comment as the lame-duck session of Congress considers emergency legislation that would impose tough new controls on the natural gas industry and possibly a price freeze.

The Capitol Hill activity comes in response to huge increases in natural gas prices — up to 20 percent over last year — while the nation is in the midst of a record gas glut.

Hodel stressed he is strongly opposed to a price freeze, saying, "I'm satisfied that if you pass a freeze on prices for a year or two, we will guarantee a gas shortage down the road."

He added: "My concern is that the passage of a narrowly focused bill at this time won't provide the relief that's expected."

Year of bible clears court

MADISON, Wis. (UPI) — A federal judge Monday denied a request by a national atheist orgranization to stop President Reagan from proclaiming 1983 the "Year of the Bible" in the United States.

U.S. District Judge James Doyle ruled the group, the Freedom from Religion Foundation, had not complied with rules requiring it provide the president or other administration officials with a copy of the motion.

The Madison-based group had given a copy to the U.S. attorney in Madison, but Doyle said that was not enough. However, he scheduled another hearing Dec. 20 on the request for the preliminary injunction.

A joint congressional resolution passed this year asks the president to issue the proclamation "in recognition of both the formative influence the Bible has been for our nation."

No more delays for WPPSS trial

SEATTLE (UPI) — A King County Superior Court judge refused Monday to delay arguments and the trial date of a suit seeking to force Northwestern utilities to start paying off $2.25 billion in bonds for two abandoned nuclear plants.

Judge H. Joseph Coleman rejected motions by attorneys for public utility districts asking for postponement of the scheduled Jan. 10 trial on validity of their contracts with Washington Public Power Supply System.

He also ordered lawyers to begin arguments on requests for a summary judgment on the issue sought by WPPSS and Chemical Bank of New York, trustee for WPPSS' bondholders.

Many of the 88 public utility districts in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Wyoming who sponsored WPPSS nuclear plants No. 4 and 5 are seeking to avoid paying their share of the construction bonds.

The first payments on bonds for the two plants, which were abandoned this year, are due early next year. Principal and interest on the bonds will cost the participants' customers more than $7 billion over the next 30 years.

Chemical Bank filed suit against the participants last summer, seeking a court order requiring them to pay their share of the bonds.

Courts in Oregon, Idaho and Wyoming have ruled 18 of the participants illegally signed contracts with WPPSS and are not obligated to pay their shares. The decisions have been appealed. Sixteen other districts are trying to get out of their pacts.

John D. Lowry, an attorney representing several participants, argued for the delay on grounds lawyers needed more time to prepare for the trial. He said WPPSS would not run out of funds if the case was put off until March and said the system would not be in default until July.

Coleman, who noted he had agreed to several continuances previously, said he believed lawyers had adequate time to get ready for the Jan. 10 trial date.

He then began hearing arguments on three motions, including Chemical Bank's request for a summary judgment holding contracts signed by Washington participants are valid, which would preclude the need for a trial.

Coleman ruled in October that the Washington utilities had authority under state law to enter contracts with WPPSS. But he ordered a trial on the districts' challenge to the validity of the pacts.

Also before the judge was a motion contending that if one of the 88 participants fails to pay its share of the debt, the other utilities are freed of their obligations.

Senator calls for aid for poor lacking heat

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A conservative senator called on the administration Monday to increase federal aid to help the "shivering" poor pay heating bills.

An industry leader backed spending nearly $2 billion on the program.

Speaking at a Senate Energy Committee hearing on the natural gas market, Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said his office has been flooded with requests for heating bill aid.

"I hope that low-income assistance will be increased by the administration to help people we know are shivering in their homes," he said.

George Lawrence, president of the American Gas Association, said the group supports "full funding for the federal fuel aid program at the $1.875 billion authorized in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981."

Several senators from gas-consuming states called for immediate relief so hundreds of thousands of consumers hit by soaring natural gas heating bills will not have their heat cut off because they cannot pay the bills.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said the administration's proposal to cut the program aid by $500 million was "cruel, unjust, inhumane and unfair," and Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., said consumers "are faced with a true emergency."

But lawmakers from producing states said "quick-fix" solutions for high natural gas prices would do more damage than good, and they called for a thorough study of the problem.

Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., laughingly asked if anyone seriously thought any of the 40 bills introduced to lower natural gas prices will be passed by this lame-duck Congress.

Chairman James McClure, R-Idaho, called that "a rhetorical question that doesn't need an answer." McClure said the panel is "extremely concerned about the sharp increases in natural gas prices in such states as Kansas, Iowa, and Missouri," but efforts to reduce gas prices "must be carefully balanced against the risk of returning to shortage conditions as were experienced in the 1970s."

What's what

Not every graduate frames the diploma flat to hang on a wall, but many do, and the act is a curious contradiction to the word "diploma," which originally meant "fold in two." Private documents carried by diplomats were doubled over and sealed to hide the contents. That fold gave such a paper the name "diploma."

Q. "My little brother sprinkled a lot of garlic powder in my basketball shoes. I was in a hurry and didn't notice. After the game, I showered, got dressed, and wore different shoes, of course, but my girlfriend swore she couldn't stand the garlic smell when she kissed me, and I guarantee you she wasn't kissing me on the feet. Is it possible that stuff got into my breath?"

A. Quite possible. Most probable. If you rub garlic on your hands, you'll wind up with it on your breath, know that.

CRITICISM

Wives tend to criticize their husbands more than husbands criticize their wives. That's Item No. 33C in our Love and War man's file on life among the married. Actually, it's drawn from a lengthy study by one Dr. Irwin Cowen who learned that one partner in any marriage elects to be the critic while the other partner accepts the blame. This has little to do with who makes the big and little decisions. It's just a personality pattern that develops between any two people who live together.

Q. How do you account for the reported fact that hard liquor sales go up about 20 percent during a recession?

A. That must be a measure of package sales, not sales by the drink. Dedicated imbibers during hard times take it home. That's cheaper.

CRIME

More than half the violent crimes are committed by people free on probation, on parole, on bail.

Q. In his list of reconditioned proverbs, did your Language man include this? "A bird in the band is finger-licking' good."

A. Possibly not. But he did include: "A bird in the hand makes it hard to blow your nose."

The English long believed that bees would never sting a virgin. That sorry notion wiped out many a good reputation, unfortunately. The bees didn't believe in it.

Professor, wife, daughter get acquainted in freedom

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Edward Lozansky spent Monday getting reacquainted with his wife and daughter.

He was reunited with them Sunday after they were permitted to emigrate from the Soviet Union — ending a six-year struggle.

Tatiana Lozansky, 30, tears streaming down her face, dashed into her husband's arms at Washington National Airport — completing the last leg of her long and emotional journey.

Their daughter, Tania, 11, was quickly swept into the family embrace.

"It's a great victory for the forces of good," said Lozansky told dozens of reporters. "It's a victory not only for the Lozansky family, but for all good people."

Lozansky, 39, who as a Soviet Jew was permitted to emigrate to Israel, left the Soviet Union in 1976. He subsequently came to the United States and is now a professor at American University in Washington.

Mrs. Lozansky, who is not Jewish, had agreed to stay in the Soviet Union and divorce him so as not to hurt her father's chances for promotion to three-star general in the Soviet Army.

She said her father, Gen. Ivan Vershov, had promised that once he was promoted he would help her to join Lozansky, but he did not.

Mrs. Lozansky and six other Soviets began hunger strikes in May for permission to join their spouses in the West. Mrs. Lozansky was the fifth to receive an exit visa. She was allowed to leave only after her father bowed to pressure to resign from the army.

The Lozanskys were remarried by proxy May 10, the day she began her hunger strike.

Woman dies quietly after court battle

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. (UPI) — Mary Buttner, whose children went to court to prevent a Long Island hospital from performing life-saving surgery on her gangrenous leg, died in her sleep, her family said.

"It was very peaceful," Mrs. Buttner's daughter, Helen Buttner, 65, said of her mother's death Sunday.

Mrs. Buttner died around 3 a.m. in Hempstead General Hospital, where doctors wanted to amputate the elderly woman's leg despite the objections of her children.

Mrs. Buttner's family was not with her when she died, her daughter said. She had turned 91 on Dec. 8.

Hospital administrators argued in court the operation to stop the spread of deadly gangrene was the only option left to save the elderly woman's life.

But the Buttner children sucessfully fought the attempt, arguing their mother had always been opposed to surgery. The children pleaded with the court to allow their mother to "die in peace."

Nassau Supreme Court Judge Paul Kelly heard the case Dec. 7, which was pleaded by Mrs. Buttner's children, Helen, William, 67, and Mary Ann Swanson, 52. The children insisted their mother, described as senile, was never in any pain and had clearly stated her objections to surgery when she was mentally fit.

Goldilocks' case before court today

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI) — Did Goldilocks really break furniture, muss the beds and help herself to the three bears' porridge?

Her guilt or innocence will be decided today by a Shady Lane Elementary School "jury."

It seems that Goldilocks has been charged with criminal trespass as part of a project initiated by Franklin County Municipal Court Judge Dale Crawford. He wants to help students learn how courts operate and what rights protect defendants and victims.

The trial will be taped by a local television station and copies of it will be made available to schools around the state. Copies of the tape also will be given to presidents of American Bar Association chapters in each of the 50 states for distribution to schools in their areas.

The students will play the principals in the trial, with Crawford acting as the judge. The trial will be taped in a Franklin County Common Pleas courtroom.

After the evidence is presented, a student jury will retire to reach a verdict.

Clark's slow recovery puzzles doctors

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Artificial heart patient Barney Clark was well enough to watch pro football on television with his family, but doctors said Monday his recovery was slower than expected from seizures a week ago.

Dr. Chase Peterson, University of Utah vice president for health science, said the medical team treating Clark was "disappointed" by the post surgery complications, but happy that his heart and other body functions "seem to be working well."

The hospital's official spokesman, John Dwan, was asked by reporters after a briefing Monday if doctors were worried.

"We are worried. We are very, very worried," he said.

"We don't know whether to be optimistic or pessimistic. We made predictions about when we expected him to recover and those weren't fulfilled. So now we just have to wait and see what happens," said Dwan.

Peterson expressed less concern, declining to say if Clark's slower than predicted improvement was a major setback. Last week doctors expressed hope Clark would improve within three to five days.

"He is the patient, not us," Peterson said. "We will have to be as patient with him as we have to be in his recovery process. How we feel about it really doesn't matter."

The 61-year-old Des Moines, Wash., dentist remained in critical condition, 11 days after historic surgery in which he became the first human to have his heart permanently replaced with an artificial device.

Clark was going through ups and downs of mental alertness, Peterson said.

"Sometimes he is very alert and involved with what's going on around him — watching a football game or having a conversation with his wife. Sometimes he is very drowsy and not responsive at all," Peterson said during the first briefing on Clark's condition since Saturday.

Peterson said there were slow, but positive signs of progress.

"He watched the football games yesterday with his wife," said Peterson. "His physicians feel his lucid periods are getting longer. There has been no great change, just a gradual improvement noted by all the people close to him."

"But the point we would like to make is that we are talking about long-term recovery," Peterson said.

Clark watched the Los Angeles Raiders-Kansas City Chiefs game Sunday with his wife and other members of his family. Dwan said Clark appeared to following the game for awhile, but then lost interest.

Peterson said Clark's Jarvik-7 heart was operating properly and all his other major organ systems were normal.

Witness to Hyatt skywalk collapse glances at $1,000 check

Hyatt witnesses line up for checks

LEAWOOD, Kan. (UPI) — Witnesses to the Hyatt Regency Hotel skywalk collapse lined up outside a suburban office of a Kansas City insurance company Monday to collect $1,000 for just having been at the scene of the 1981 disaster.

In return for the payment, which one attorney called unprecedented, the witnesses agreed to waive their right to sue the hotel's owners and any others associated with building the luxury facility.

"I don't know of any mass disaster where anyone has arrived at some blanket figure for onlookers," said Lantz Welch, a personal injury lawyer who represents several Hyatt victims.

The July 17, 1981, accident, in which two concrete and steel skywalks fell onto a crowded dance floor, caused 114 deaths and injured more than 200.

Attorney John Murphy, who represents plaintiffs in a state court class action suit, said he felt the settlement was fair.

More than 70 people lined up outside the office of Commercial Union Insurance Co. before it opened at 9 a.m., ignoring freezing temperatures and chilly winds.

Of the 240 claims filed Monday, all but five were settled, officials said.

Although there were reports that several thousand people were in the Hyatt lobby that night, Murphy said his best estimate was about 750 to 1,000.

The payments will continue at least until Dec. 28, the date people must decide whether they want to stay in the state court class action suit. On Jan. 5, a judge will consider whether to approve the suit. However, claim forms may be filed until June 1983.

There are two ways that a person at the Hyatt Regency that night could claim $1,000. If a person was on a list of names of those known to be at the hotel, they simply filed a claim form and signed the waiver.

Latest cyanide victim released from hospital

SAN JOSE, Calif. (UPI) — A woman who nearly died in a coma induced by a cyanide-laced Anacin-3 capsule was allowed to leave a hospital Monday, and police investigating the case as attempted murder said they would give her husband a lie detector test this week.

A spokesman at Good Samaritan Hospital said Sue Bowen, 30, would require speech therapy because of brain stem damage from the poisoned capsule.

State health officials at Berkeley, who were involved in the investigation said they had found no other instances of contamination in tests of 3,280 capsules.

Police said they had no leads but deputy police chief Larry Stuefloten said, "We are not eliminating anybody or anything."

He said a number of possible motives were being considered.

"Was the lady a target? Was the family? Was Long's drugstore? Was Anacin? We're checking out all the possibilities," Stuefloten said.

Mrs. Bowen began frothing at the mouth and collapsed in a coma Nov. 26, after taking a tainted capsule.

A team of experts worked through the weekend at the state health department's Berkeley laboratory to test thousands of capsules and investigate complaints of Anacin packages that appeared to have been tampered with.

"We've completed our investigation . . . and the results are negative," said Warren Crawford, regional administrator for the California Department of Health Services.

"We've checked out everything. Now we are waiting to follow up on any possible new leads brought to us."

Crawford said the incident created a lot of anxiety among consumers fearful of buying tampered productes.

"We've gotten and tested everything from drugs to food to cosmetics" from people who suspect tampering, he said.

Police searched hospital records to try to determine whether any cases of cyanide poisoning may have gone undiagnosed in the past two months.

Workers at the drugstore where the capsules were bought also were questioned, along with friends of the Bowens.

Jamie home for yule

BRIDGEWATER, Mass. (UPI) — A happy and healthy Jamie Fiske, the 12-month-old girl who underwent a lifesaving liver transplant last month, will be home well before Christmas, her father said Monday.

Charles Fiske said he and his wife Marilyn planned to bring Jamie home to Bridgewater Thursday from the University of Minnesota Hospital in Minneapolis.

"It looks pretty positive for Thursday" barring any last minute changes, Fiske said.

Doctors warned Jamie would not have lived until Thanksgiving without the successful transplant surgery she underwent Nov. 5. Fiske said Jamie's recovery was the best Christmas gift of all.

"For the four of us to sit at the same table, to have both children in the same house, both of us together, that's more than anybody could ever really want," Fiske said.

Doctors expect Jamie "to enjoy a good healthy life," Fiske said.

The Fiske family, which includes 2½ year old son Daren, has shuttled between hospitals and hotels since Jamie first entered Childrens Hospital in Boston July 5. She was later transferred to Minneapolis.

The child suffered from biliary artesia, an incurable liver disorder that makes it impossible to digest food and cause a build-up of toxic matter in the blood.

Peruvian cabinet steps out after prime minister resigns

MANUEL ULLOA
Victim of economy

LIMA, Peru (UPI) — The government's 15-member cabinet resigned Monday following Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa's decision to step down as a result of continuing economic crisis, government spokesmen announced.

It was the first cabinet resignation in Peru since the civilian government of President Fernando Belaunde Terry assumed office in July, 1980, ending 12 years of military rule.

The spokesmen said Ulloa will be replaced by Peruvian Ambassador to the United States and First Vice President Fernando Schwalb.

But Schwalb is not expected to return to Lima from Washington until later this month, so Ulloa will remain in charge of the government in a caretaker capacity until then.

It was not immediately known whether Belaunde had accepted the resignations of the cabinet ministers.

Ulloa, 60, is also minister of economy, finance and commerce, and has been the most criticized member of the administration. His team of vice ministers and National Bank President Manuel Bustamente also resigned.

In a resignation letter to Belaunde Friday and made public Monday, Ulloa warned against "any abrupt change" in the government economic policy. "The consequences would be disastrous," he said.

Ulloa said he was stepping down to allow "renovation of spent efforts," adding, "I believe I have completed my duty."

Political sources said the most likely changes will come at foreign relations, agriculture, fisheries, transportation and interior.

Ulloa, a former Wall Street financier, was able to make little headway in his fight against Peru's soaring inflation — the government's top priority.

Government statistics in November and December showed the cost of living soared well above 70 percent, as high as last year's. The figure is 30 points higher than Ulloa had predicted.

Castro joins chorus condemning U.S. 'role' in crash of helicopter

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — Cuba's Fidel Castro charged Monday the United States and "its miserable accomplices" were responsible for last week's Nicaraguan helicopter crash that killed 84 Indian women and children.

"This blood stains with disgrace the infamy of the imperialist U.S. government, which directs, organizes and finances all the criminal plan," Castro said in the letter published in the government newspaper Barricada only hours before a mass funeral for the victims of Thursday's crash.

"It throws a . . . stain on its miserable accomplices in Honduras and other countries.

"The shattered lives of these children, the hope of new Nicaraguan, fall upon the consciences of those guilty for the siege of that heroic and unyielding people," Castro said.

Castro was echoing charges by leftist Sandinista officials that rightist guerrillas armed by the United States may have shot the helicopter down.

The State Department has rejected as "absurd" Nicaragua's claim that the United States was to blame for the crash.

It was expected that the Sandinista government would use the funeral to blast alleged American support for anti-government rebels who operate out of neighboring Honduras.

Probe of American's death likely

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) — Seeking to calm the distraught mother of a slain American tourist, the U.S. Embassy Monday said El Salvador's military probably will launch a probe into the killing of her son by soldiers.

An embassy spokesman said Ambassador Deane Hinton was to meet with Renata Margaret Kline, whose son Michael, 21, was shot dead Oct. 13 while traveling through El Salvador on a bus headed to Costa Rica.

Mrs. Kline has demanded embassy copies of official reports on the case and statements by three soldiers who shot her son. Her lawyer said the young American was hit twice in the back by bullets fired from less than 25 inches away.

The embassy spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said Washington must authorize the release of the documents she requested, but added the mission already had asked the Salvadoran government to open a new investigation of the killing.

The U.S. request noted there were "discrepancies" between an autopsy report and the statement by El Salvador's Defense Ministry that Kline was killed when he tried to escape after soldiers pulled him off the bus.

The ministry has said Kline was a guerrilla "mercenary" who grabbed a rifle from the soldiers during his escape attempt.

Peso at record rate of 140-1

EL PASO, Texas (UPI) — The trading rate for the peso, urged upward by Mexico's proposal to reopen the international exchange market next week, reached a record rate of 140 pesos for $1 Monday.

El Paso National Bank opened its exchange window Monday with rates of buying 145 pesos for $1 and selling 130 pesos for $1.

By mid-morning, EPNB dropped its buying rate to 140 pesos for $1.

State National Bank was selling 132 pesos for $1.

Mexico's budget hit

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Mexican congressmen Monday lashed out at the nation's $100 billion austerity budget, charging it will wallop the poor but leave unscathed "those who sacked the country."

Budget and Planning Minister Carlos Salinas de Gortari, in a speech before the Chamber of Deputies, the lower house of congress, said Mexico's $100 billion austerity budget requires top officials give up nearly all government-paid fringe benefits, including private airplanes.

Salinas de Gortari said a program to allow free trading of currency, expected to result in a severe devaluation when it takes effect next Monday, will help Mexico's exports of manufactured goods in the international market.

The minister said the 1983 national budget unveiled last week for the first time ever lists salaries of all government officials, including President Miguel de la Madrid, who earns about $85,000 annually.

But congressman after congressman stood up during the question and answer session and blasted the government program.

De la Madrid, who took office Dec. 1., developed the program to strengthen the economy, reeling under the weight of an $81 billion foreign debt — one of the world's largest.

Sectarian fighting engulfs Lebanon's Tripoli, mountains

U.S marines, Lebanese troops begin joint exercise

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — U.S. Marines and Lebanese army soldiers Monday began joint training exercises in helicopter assault techniques, a spokesman for the 1,300 American troops in Lebanon said.

"The exercises will involve an exchange of techniques," Capt. Dale Dye said. "The U.S. Marines are pioneers in vertical assault techniques and so the weight of the training in this area will fall on us."

Between 220 and 230 Marines and approximately 75 Lebanese army officers and enlisted men began the helicopter assault training, Dye said. The program lasts about 21 days.

The Marines, part of the 24th Marine Amphibious Unit, are serving with the U.S.-French-Italian peace-keeping force sent to Lebanon after the Sept. 14 assassination of President-elect Beshir Gemayel and the Sept. 16-18 west Beirut massacre of hundreds of Palestinian refugees.

By United Press International

Pro and anti-Syrian militias battled in Lebanon's northern city of Tripoli for the seventh straight day Monday and sectarian strife in the southeastern Shouf mountains killed at least 25 people, officials said.

Seen as a challenge to Lebanese President Amin Gemayel's strength and authority, the fighting in Tripoli and the Shouf region raised fears of Syrian intervention and civil war between Lebanon's numerous military and political factions.

Mortar, rocket and artillery fire in and around the Syrian-held city of Tripoli intensified after a morning lull and sent terrified residents back to basements and shelters, police said.

There were no immediate reports of casualties in Tripoli, Lebanon's second-largest city with 250,000 people located 53 miles north of Beirut. Tripoli and surrounding areas are controlled by Syrian troops sent to Lebanon during the 1975-76 civil war that killed an estimated 40,000 people and wounded 100,000 others.

The city is a battleground for about 20 political and religious groups split over the continued presence of some 40,000 Syrian forces still in the Tripoli region and in the eastern Bekaa Valley.

More than 30 people have died and at least 100 others have been wounded since the fighting erupted last Tuesday between pro- and anti-Syrian militias.

Lebanon's independent Central News Agency, with close connections to the government, said Gemayel sent an envoy to Damascus "in the past 48 hours" for talks with Syrian leaders. The agency did not elaborate.

In the Shouf mountains southeast of Beirut, 25 people died during the last 24 hours in mortar and artillery battles between Lebanese Christian and Druze Moslem militias, police said. The battles raged in 11 small villages.

Lebanese government officials complained that Israeli troops occupying the area since shortly after the June 6 invasion of Lebanon imposed a curfew on the town of Aley, 9 miles east of Beirut. There was no fighting in Aley.

But the Israelis, who the Lebanese claim are instigating sectarian strife to prolong their stay in Lebanon, made no effort to stop clashes in the 11 villages, the officials said privately.

Gemayel blames the presence of the Syrians, 30,000 Israeli and up to 10,000 Palestine Liberation Organization troops occupying two-thirds of Lebanon for continued strife.

Shultz sees no real change in Poland

ROME (UPI) — Secretary of State George Shultz said Monday there was no substantial change in Poland despite Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski's promise to suspend martial law by year's end.

He said Western sanctions would continue until real change is evident.

The United States is "looking closely at what was said and consulting with our allies in a preliminary way," he said.

"What we've seen so far is words but nothing of substance. At this point nothing which was said will cause us to change what is taking place," Shultz said in a joint news conference with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

Shultz was referring to economic sanctions imposed against Poland and the Soviet Union 11 months ago.

Shultz and Colombo also discussed allegations that Bulgarian secret service agents were involved in the May 13, 1981, attempt on the life of Pope John Paul II.

Before meeting Colombo, Shultz spent 40 minutes with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak. Shultz said the main focus was a preview of Mubarak's forthcoming visit to Washington. The Egyptian president is scheduled to visit Washington in the last week of January.

Shultz said that he and Mubarak "shared a kind of impatience to see things get moving" in the withdrawal of foreign troops from Lebanon and the negotiations in the Middle East in general.

Before the meeting, one of Mubarak's chief aides told reporters the Egyptian president would ask Shultz to press Israel for a prompt withdrawal from Lebanon and restate Egypt's position that the Palestinians have a right to self-rule.

The aide, Egyptian Foreign Ministry official Oussama El-Baze, said Mubarak was not carrying any new initiatives.

Shultz went into the meeting with Mubarak with a plan to revive the stalled negotiations in the Middle East through the use of U.S. mediators between Lebanon and Israel.

Shultz earlier met with the pope and said they had discussed the Polish situation but Shultz refused to give details of his talks in the Vatican.

Colombo described his talks with Shultz as "very intense ... and wide-ranging." He said they discussed East-West relations, the Polish situation, disarmament, the Middle East and the question of terrorism.

The Italian foreign minister said he discussed the situation with Shultz and added, "We will also pass the data on to our NATO allies."

Hundreds killed in Yemen

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — A 40-second earthquake jolted the Persian Gulf nation of Yemen at noon Monday, killing hundreds of people and causing heavy property damage, news reports monitored in Beirut said.

The National Earthquake Information Service of the U.S. Geological Survey in Boulder, Colo., estimated the magnitude of the quake at 6.0 on the open-ended Richter scale.

The Gulf news agency based in Bahrain reported the earthquake hit about 80 villages, killing at least 335 people in the town of Jahran about 60 miles south of the North Yemen capital of Sanaa. There was no independent confirmation of the casualty figures.

The agency said one hospital in Sanaa received 300 dead and injured.

The Israeli Seismological Institute reported an earth movement measuring 6.8 on the Richter scale in the Indian Ocean north of the Seychelles islands at the same time. No sign of the quake was reported in the islands some 1,000 miles east of the African coast.

Police drag women protesters from air base

NEWBURY, England (UPI) — Police Monday dragged some 100 women away from an entrance to a U.S. air base to allow American servicemen through a crowd protesting NATO plans to deploy new nuclear weapons in Europe.

A total of some 800 women blocked all eight entrances to the Greenham Common, Berkshire, air force base, about 50 miles west of London. The base also serves some British military purposes.

A police spokesman in Newbury said one woman and a policemen were slightly hurt when about 100 women were forcibly removed to clear a path for five buses carrying U.S. military personnel. No arrests were reported.

"There are about 800 people in a sit-down protest at all eight gates to the base, but the demonstration is peaceful," said the spokesman.

The women had maintained a vigil through the night, continuing a demonstration begun Sunday by an estimated 30,000 women who held hands to form a human chain around the perimeter fence.

The demonstrations at Greenham Common, where 96 cruise missiles are to be deployed next year, were organized by women's groups and anti-nuclear organizations.

The protest was one of many across Europe Sunday against plans to deploy 572 cruise and Pershing-2 weapons which Western leaders say are necessary to counter new Soviet SS-20 medium-range missiles.

Protesters began demonstrating against the missile plans a year ago, charging the weapons would make western Europe a more likely target in any Soviet attack and increase the possibility of a nuclear war.

In West Germany, organizers of Sunday's protests at about 50 American, Canadian and West German military bases said the demonstrations were "a great success".

German police took about 250 people into custody but later released them without arrest after taking their names, a spokesman said.

In Italy, peace campaigners continued the march they started in Milan, Nov. 27, planning to walk to Comiso, Sicily, by Christmas to protest the planned deployment at that base of 112 cruise missiles.

NATO members decided three years ago to station the missiles in Western Europe to counter the Soviet SS-20 medium-range missiles already deployed in Eastern Europe.

NATO foreign ministers reiterated last week that deployment of the new weapons will proceed in 1983 if current arms reduction talks with the Soviet Union in Geneva fail.

Court extends water battle

By ELIZABETH OLSON
United Press International

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, acting in a water rights dispute between New Mexico and Colorado, ruled 9-0 Monday that a state must show the benefits of diverting river water clearly outweigh the harm that might result.

But the justices said the facts in the four-year-old case were too murky for them to apply the principle in the dispute over the Vermejo River, which originates in Colorado but is located primarily in New Mexico.

Justice Thurgood Marshall, who wrote the opinion, said lower courts must reexamine the dispute to determine a "just and equitable apportionment of the water of the Vermejo River."

Colorado must show by "clear and convincing evidence" that the benefits of the proposed diversion outweigh the potential harm, the court said.

In a 1943 case, the court said the benefits of existing water uses must be weighed against the harms of such uses. In Monday's opinion, the court extended that balancing test to include proposed water uses.

The Vermejo River, a small, non-navigable river rises, in the Rocky Mountains in southern Colorado. It flows southeasterly into New Mexico for 55 miles before it joins the Canadian River.

Although Colorado has not made use of the water, New Mexico farmers and industries have diverted water from the river for years. In 1975, the Colorado Fuel and Iron Steel Corp. obtained rights to divert the river water for a planned industrial development.

But a federal district court judge in 1976 issued an injunction precluding use of the water of the Vermejo or its tributaries until all claimed rights of the New Mexico users were satisfied.

Colorado sought relief in the U.S. Supreme Court by filing a so-called "original" case. The Constitution provides that the nation's highest court settle controversies involving two or more states.

It is "entirely appropriate to consider the extent to which reasonable conservation measures by New Mexico might offset the proposed Colorado diversion and thereby minimize any injury to New Mexico users," Marshall wrote.

He suggested the lower courts examine whether Colorado had "undertaken reasonable steps to minimize the amount of diversion that will be required."

Clues sought for murderer

SPOKANE (UPI)— It was three years ago Monday Sam Durante learned his daughter was strangled in her Seattle apartment.

He has adjusted, with much difficulty, to life without Sylvia, 20, but he is still constantly bothered that her killer appears to have gone unpunished for his crime.

In hopes of rekindling some interest in her case, Durante of Spokane, renewed his offer of $20,000 cash for information leading to the arrest and conviction of Sylvia's killer.

"Three years is a long time for a killer to keep quiet. By now, you would think the person is bound to spill out to somebody," said Durante. "Maybe with a little publicity somebody will come to light."

"I really, probably should try to forget, but it bothers me that somebody who could do that is running loose and possibly is still at it."

Durante said he suspects his daughter, a waitress, may have seen too much when she was robbed at gunpoint at the restaurant four days before her murder.

She was found with a nylon cord wrapped around her neck.

"The police never finalized in their minds if it was a robber or not. They said they covered every angle, but we feel they didn't put enough effort into the case."

His real hope, however, is for witnesses to come forward for the reward, or the killer, to come forward to clear his conscience.

"Three years is a long time for a killer to be running loose, and there must be hundreds of them out there with no respect for life," Durante said.

"How can they go through life that way? Something's got to be burning inside of them all the time," said Durante.

Electronic poker legality pending

HELENA, Mont. (UPI) — The Montana Supreme Court is expected to rule soon on the question of whether electronic poker machines are legal under a state law recognizing "live" card games with a posted house "rakeoff."

Nevertheless, an increasing number of electronic poker machines continue to show up in Montana bars.

That's brought one bar owner — Morris Bruner of Helena — to dispute a rumor that each poker machine produces a weekly profit of $1,000.

Sexual abuse of pupils increasing

DENVER (UPI) — Education officials in Colorado say sexual abuse of children by teachers has increased in recent months, with reported incidents averaging one a week.

Under rules adopted last year, instances of sexual abuse by teachers must be reported to the State Board of Education, which is then empowered to revoke, annul or suspend a teaching certificate. Education Commissioner Calvin Frazier said reported cases of sexual misconduct by teachers in the presence of a student "started slowly, about one (complaint every two months."

"But in the last two months, we've probably had one a week. It has been more serious than I ever anticipated," Frazier said.

By a 3-2 vote taken last week in Colorado Springs, the board voted to change the wording in the regulation to allow for revocation of a teacher certificate for any "immoral conduct."

"What we are doing is lifting a license, which is more extreme than dismissal," Frazier said.

"We're saying if a teacher has been having intercourse with a 13-year-old girl or a 10-year-old girl — as occurred in one case — this is extreme enough where you ought to lift the certificate."

Frazier said teachers who engage in misconduct are advised to get treatment before they are allowed back in the classroom.

Defoliant conflict continues

By MARIANNA OHE
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Herbicides that contain some of the same elements as the controversial defoliant Agent Orange could be banned in the western Oregon forests without harming the vital timber industry, said a study released Monday.

But the report said questions still remain regarding the toxicity and cost effectiveness of the herbicides, and the availability to forest managers of substitutes for as well as additional management options.

Conflict over domestic use of phenoxy herbicides — 2,4,5-T; silvex; 2,4-D; and 2,4-DP — also has persisted for almost 15 years amid government hearings, rulings, suits and countersuits. The defoliants have been used on rangelands, pastures, lakes and ponds, forests and farmlands.

Agent Orange, which was used in Vietnam to defoliate thick rain forests, was a mixture of 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T.

In 1970 the Agriculture Department banned use of 2,4,5-T on crops and on lakes and ponds around the home. In 1979 the Environmental Protection Agency suspended use of 2,4,5-T and silvex in forestry.

Citizens groups demanded a ban on 2,4,5-T and silvex in the late 1970s following reports of spontaneous abortions in women who lived near sprayed areas.

Before imposing a ban, the EPA conducted a study, disputed by the scientific community as inconclusive, showing abnormal miscarriage rates in Alsea, Oregon, a sprayed area.

Timber industry representatives say the herbicides, used in forests to keep down brush so that timber can grow unimpeded, are safe when properly used and have asked the EPA to lift the ban.

"We find that the chemicals seem to be neither as hazardous as citizens groups would have us believe, nor as essential as the industry maintains," said Kass Green, author of the report for the non-profit New York-based Council on Economic Priorities.

However, the council study found the present bans on 2,4,5-T and silvex will have little effect on either the present net worth of future timber investments or future timber yields in western Oregon because many alternative methods of weed supression are available.

Vietnam War veterans long have battled to get the government to compensate them for what they believe are harmful after effects suffered from Agent Orange. Some 21 million gallons of the chemical were used in defoliation operations in Vietnam between 1962 and 1971.

"Various laboratory experiments and epidemiolgical studies since the late 1960s have shown some of these chemicals — to be carcinogenic, mutagenic or teratogenic (harmful to the development of the fetus while in the uterus) under certain circumstances," the study said. "These studies have not produced definitive conclusions as to whether these chemicals would harm human health during normal use as herbicides."

The board also found that improved forestry practices would, in many cases, more than compensate for any regional losses that occur and could boost regional timber yields by 24 to 47 percent by the year 2038 under present bans.

However this applies more to government or private forest land than to the timber industry, which already has fairly efficient management techniques.

Present or future bans on herbicides will not affect western Oregon timber yields for 30 years, the study said.

It predicted maximum regional losses under present bans could peak at 4.9 percent in 2038, and would rise to 7 percent with a ban on all phenoxy herbicides.

The Council also found that, with care, the herbicides can be applied so that communities are well protected from exposure.

New contract talks avoid Utah bus strike

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — UTA's buses continued rolling Monday as management and union negotiators returned to the bargaining tables in time to come up with a second tentative contract, preventing an impending lockout.

By 8 p.m. Sunday, a systemwide strike appeared certain, after union bus drivers and mechanics rejected a proposed contract by a 201-154 vote. But, UTA and union officials resumed contract talks and came back with a new tentative agreement at 10:30 p.m.

UTA spokesman John Kennedy and Les Lewis, president of Amalgamated Transit Union Local 382, said in a joint statement the drivers and mechanics will vote on the latest proposal "either next Thursday or Friday."

In the meantime, the UTA's buses will continue to roll throughout Davis, Salt Lake, Utah, Tooele and Weber counties "without disruption of service," pending a new ratification vote, Kennedy said.

Before the talks resumed, Kennedy indicated the bus company would "juggle the employment package" to avoid putting new money into the proposed contract. He said, "There will be no additional funds offered. We just don't have it."

He called the new offer "reasonable," but declined to release specific details of the proposed 3-year pact. The old agreement had expired at midnight Friday.

Lewis said the rank and file union members apparently rejected the initial offer due to clauses covering part-time workers and furloughed procedures.

"They are very concerned about the lay off procedures," Lewis said, "and how that would affect the regular operators."

Kennedy had said, if the impasse could not be resolved, bus service "may be temporarily disrupted." Last year UTA locked out its drivers and mechanics for four days when they voted against an agreement with the bus company.

The talks are being held with the assistance of Federal Mediator Thomas Curdie.

Missing patient returns to facility

MEDICAL LAKE, Wash. (UPI) — One of two missing Eastern State Hospital patients has returned to the Medical Lake facility of his own accord.

Charles Hecla, 34, disappeared Nov. 26. He returned to the facility and was readmitted Sunday morning.

The other patient, Ronald Kohlhas, 34, Richland, remains at large.

Lawsuit filed over nativity scene in city

DENVER (UPI) — One of four people who filed a lawsuit against the annual nativity scene on the steps of the City and County Building says it's clear the Colorado Supreme Court will ultimately rule in his favor.

The high court recently reinstated the year-old lawsuit, ruling a lower court judge wrongly dismissed the case. David Hofer and his three co-plaintiffs argued the annual nativity scene violates the constitutional mandate for separation of church and state.

"It is a total waste of time for the city to continue to litigate it," Hofer said Sunday, adding that he has offered to settle out of court.

Hofer said Denver has only to agree to cease displaying the nativity scene every year, and he will drop the case and drop his demand that the figures be sold at public auction. City attorneys, however, say they are not giving up.

TWIN FALLS — Monday was not a good day for a couple of Magic Valley residents to be out and about.

Josephine Maddocks (above) is aided by Twin Falls police and emergency medical technicians after she fell Monday afternoon while bowling at the Bowladrome.

She sustained possible injuries to her left arm and shoulder and was taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. Maddocks was reported in good condition Monday night.

And in the photo on the right, emergency medical technicians Pat Hightower and Bob Sauer assist a Richfield resident, Roy Young, who was injured when he apparently fainted and fell while shopping Monday afternoon at Ernst's Home Center in Twin Falls.

The man was undergoing tests and treatment for facial cuts and bruises at Magic Valley Medical Center late Monday.

If Maddocks and Young were not superstitious before, they may have reason to be now.

State denies Twin chamber travel funds

By STEVE LIPSON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Idaho Travel Committee has refused to provide tourist-promotion funds to the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce.

The committee, during its meeting last week in Coeur d'Alene, also cut a request from the Sun Valley-Ketchum Chamber of Commerce by 40 percent before awarding the funds.

Representatives of both chambers have criticized the committee's action.

"We're glad we have something, but it's not nearly enough," said Deborah George, the executive director of the Sun Valley chamber.

Jerry Jaeger, the chairman of the state Travel Committee, says one reason Twin Falls did not receive any funds was because it had received more than $26,000 in two previous grants.

"We're trying to do this as equitably and fairly as we can," he said. "For any community that receives an ITC grant to count on those to be a continual source of funds would be improper."

The state Travel Committee awarded about $68,000 in tourist-promotion grants to the "Magicland" region of south-central Idaho. Every six months, the committee distributes money raised by a 2 percent state tax on hotel accommodations. About half the money raised by the tax is used for statewide promotions. The other half is returned to the region where it was raised to pay for area promotions.

Most of the money awarded in this region for tourist promotions during the next six months, more than $36,000, went to the Magicland regional travel committee for preparing a promotional program. The Sun Valley chamber received $23,000 for its summer and fall advertising program.

The next largest amount of money was the $22,000 available for promotions in this region that the state committee decided not to award.

The Hagerman Chamber of Commerce received a grant of slightly more than $4,000 to put a sign promoting the Hagerman Valley near Jackpot and to produce bumper stickers promoting the area. And about $3,000 was awarded to the Outfitters and Guides Association for advertising its services.

"I'm a little disappointed," said Mike Dolton, the executive director of the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce. The chamber applied for $26,000 to begin a program to help lure conventions to Twin Falls.

"I don't think we were treated fairly," he said.

Because the grant proposal was rejected by the state Travel Committee, Dolton now will have to wait six months before he can hope to get more travel-promotion funds.

George was particularly upset that Travel Committee decisions cannot be appealed. The ski-resort area she represents is trying to promote itself as a year-round resort. The $15,000 cut from its grant request by the state committee would have been used to step up the campaign for summer and fall business in Ketchum and Sun Valley. Without the money, the effort will have to wait another year, she says.

The national recession is crimping tourist travel this winter. Competition from other ski areas is fierce. And as a result, gaining summer business is crucial to the survival of many tourist-related businesses in Ketchum and Sun Valley, George says.

Private phone lines coming for three more Magic Valley towns

BOISE — One-party telephone service will be available to customers in 13 Idaho cities beginning next year, including three Magic Valley communities, according to the state Public Utilities Commission.

This year, Mountain Bell Telephone Co. has installed equipment for one-party service in six largely rural Idaho exchanges. Many of these never had offered one-party service.

The project is part of Mountain Bell's response to a June 1981 order from the PUC, saying that all two- and four-party lines remaining in Idaho be converted to one-party lines by 1986.

Exchanges converted to one-party service this year included Buhl, Island Park, Blackfoot, Rirle, Franklin, Firth, Nampa and Lewisville-Menan, the PUC said.

Area communities scheduled to receive complete one-party service during the next year include Jerome, Wendell and Glenns Ferry.

Also, some Mountain Bell customers in the main Boise and Pocatello exchanges still without one-party service will be offered single lines for the first time in 1983.

In addition, Mountain Bell has announced that its oldest office in the state, which is at Hailey, has now become its most modern.

A $2 million electronic switching system recently was installed there. Last week, it began providing a host of new services to customers in the Hailey and Bellevue areas.

Customers now will have to dial all seven digits to complete a local call. And they will have new codes to complete calls to other phones sharing their party line.

They now will be able to dial overseas calls direct, and they will be able to use measured service, a billing system that Mountain Bell says could save money for half their customers.

Smith 1st female commissioner

JEROME — As far as veteran Jerome County Courthouse employees know, Palema Smith, a 35-year-old schoolteacher, will become the county's first woman county commissioner when she takes office Jan. 11.

She was appointed to the position last week by Gov. John Evans, who selected her from a list of three nominees recommended by the Jerome County Republican Central Committee.

Smith, who will resign her junior-high teaching position at the end of the school year, will replace Russell Howell Jr., who resigned because of health reasons, effective Jan. 11.

A Times-News story last Saturday about Smith's appointment reported that she serves as the Jerome County state Republican Committeewoman. She is a former state committeewoman; the position is now held by Mrs. Jerry Callen Sr. of Jerome.

Zoning hearing scheduled

TWIN FALLS — A public hearing will be held early next month on a proposal to rezone 180 acres of agricultural land near Buhl for commercial and residential development.

The hearing, before the three-member Twin Falls County commission, is scheduled to begin at 11 a.m. on Jan. 5.

The county commissioners have the final say over the rezoning request, filed by Cecil Lyons of Buhl. Last week, the county Planning and Zoning Commission, on a split vote, recommended approval of Lyons' plan.

The proposal deals with an area located on both sides of U.S.-30, one-mile west of Buhl. Lyons wants to rezone as commercial land the area that is located 660 feet back from the south side of the highway and 400 feet back from the north side of the highway. The rest of the area would be developed as residential land, with a minimum lot size of 2.5 acres.

Landfill holiday hours set

TWIN FALLS — The landfill system in Twin Falls County will be closed for the Christmas and New Year's weekends.

The operating schedule for Christmas calls for the landfills to close at 3 p.m. on Christmas Eve and reopen on Monday, Dec. 27.

The landfills will close at 3 p.m. on New Year's Eve and reopen on Monday, Jan. 3, 1983.

Plane-crash victims stable

HAILEY — Two men, injured in a plane crash Saturday, remain in satisfactory condition at the Blaine County Medical Center.

Bruce Fulton, 37, and Tony Smith, 41, both of Hailey, suffered back injuries, lacerations and fractures when their plane, a two-seater owned by Fulton, lost power and crashed northeast of Gooding.

The accident, which occurred Saturday afternoon, still is under investigation by the Gooding County sheriff's office.

Disposal-well confab postponed

RUPERT — A meeting scheduled for this week to discuss the use of irrigation disposal wells in Minidoka County has been postponed until January.

No new date has been set for the meeting.

It originally was scheduled for Wednesday. But news reports from Boise incorrectly said the meeting would be held Friday.

Because of the confusion about the meeting time, and to avoid a conflict with Christmas shopping, the state Department of Water Resources decided to postpone the meeting, a department spokesman said.

The department recently completed a study recommending that a third of the irrigation disposal wells used in the A and B Irrigation District be replaced with other drainage devices. Irrigation disposal wells help prevent flooding by allowing water to run into the underground aquifer. But the study showed that the runoff water can be polluted with sediment and farm chemicals.

Idaho Power hearing delayed

BOISE — A hearing before the state Public Utilities Commission concerning a dispute between a Gooding man and the Idaho Power Co. has been postponed.

The hearing would have been held Monday. It is now scheduled for next Monday.

John Koyle of Gooding has proposed building a hydropower plant at the juncture of the Big Wood and Little Wood rivers. Idaho Power is required to buy power from such "cogeneration" projects at prices set by the PUC. But Koyle says the utility refuses to sign a contract to purchase his power.

Idaho Power has asked the PUC to lower the price it must pay for power from cogeneration projects. A hearing on that request is scheduled for January.

In the meantime, an Idaho Power spokesman says the utility is willing to negotiate with Koyle. But the utility wants to avoid obligating its ratepayers to a long-term contract at a rate that later may be found to have been too high. So it has asked Koyle to agree to contract provisions that would allow the price for his power to be adjusted by the PUC in the future.

Home-tour was successful

WENDELL — A home tour in Wendell two weekends ago raised $625 for the swimming-pool fund.

According to organizer Phyllis Bunnm, of the Wendell Recreation District, about 160 people attended from Wendel, Jerome, Gooding, Hagerman, Buhl, Bliss, Paul, Twin Falls, Heyburn and Ketchum.

"We feel that's great," Bunn said. "I was surprised how many men attended."

The money raised will be used to help pay the remaining debt of $4,600 on the municipal swimming pool.

'Hotline' nabs wrong-way driver

JEROME — A highway tragedy may have been averted Saturday by a call to the state's "hotline" for reporting drunken drivers.

About 10:15 p.m., the Idaho State Police office in Twin Falls was notified by a citizen about a vehicle traveling on the wrong side of divided highway I-84, west of Burley.

Officers were dispatched to the scene, and about 10:20 p.m., they observed a car westbound in the eastbound lane of traffic.

ISP Cpl. Rick Wright and Jerome County sheriff's Deputy Jim Howe arrrested Melvin Hayes, 58, of Rupert, and charged him with driving while intoxicated. He is being held in the Jerome County Jail.

ISP Sgt. Ed Strickfaden said officers estimated the vehicle had traveled about eight miles in the wrong lane.

"We really feel like a holiday tragedy may have been avoided," Strickfaden said, noting that intoxicated drivers who end up on the wrong side of the road almost always cause serious accidents.

The state's toll-free REDDI — Report Every Drunk Driver Immediately — line has been in operation for about three months and allows citizens to report drunken drivers and emergency situations.

The number is 1-800-233-1212.

Against drug defendant

Judge drops charge of intimidating a witness

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Defense lawyers successfully knocked out of court Monday one of two felony charges pending against a Twin Falls man who was arrested earlier this year for allegedly possessing nine ounces of marijuana stems.

And they were preparing to argue against the second charge filed against 26-year-old Delbert Smith in a hearing scheduled for next week.

Monday's court hearing dealt with the charge that Smith intimidated a witness. Prosecutors alleged that Smith threatened John Schwartz of Twin Falls, after Schwartz reportedly informed police that the defendant was in possession of marijuana. Based on that report, police obtained a search warrant and arrested Smith.

According to Schwartz's testimony at a preliminary hearing earlier this year, Smith subsequently threatened to beat him or to shoot him. Smith was ordered bound over to the district court on the intimidation charge.

The defendant later pleaded innocent to the charge.

Monday, defense lawyer Kathy Epeldi argued that prosecutors lacked evidence to support the charge. While such threats were made, Smith's actions dealt with Schwartz's decision to inform police in the first place. Smith was not attempting to keep Schwartz from testifying, she said.

"I don't think there's any evidence showing that Mr. Smith threatened Mr. Schwartz about testimony he was about to give," Epeldi said.

Deputy prosecutor Dennis Voorhees argued that the intimidating effect of Smith's comments should have been obvious.

But Judge Daniel Meehl said the evidence pointed more to hostilities between the two men than to any calculated effort to intimate a witness.

Moreover, none of the evidence in the case indicated that Schwartz would be called as a witness in Smith's trial, Meehl said.

The decision clears the way for defense lawyer Golden Bennett's efforts to have the drug charge against Smith dropped.

Bennett, who is representing Smith on the marijuana charge, is asking Meehl to either dismiss the charge entirely or to reduce it to a misdemeanor marijuana-possession charge. Possession of less than three ounces of marijuana is a misdemeanor under Idaho law.

Although police say they found nine ounces of marijuana stems in Smith's residence, Bennett argues that the defendant was not in violation of Idaho law.

His motion is based on the grounds that:

- Idaho laws do not recognize mature marijuana stocks as a controlled substance.
- Police found the marijuana in a trash can. As such, the defendant had abandoned the marijuana and did not possess it.

Probation violations may send three to prison

TWIN FALLS — Three criminal defendants are scheduled to spend at least one more week in jail before a judge decides whether to free them or send them to the state penitentiary at Boise.

All three defendants violated their probations and are subject to their original prison terms.

The defendants are:

- Thad Lynn Moneypenny, 20, of Boise. Moneypenny was placed on a two-year probation on Sept. 20, in lieu of a 10-year prison sentence, for grand theft. Idaho Division of Probation and Parole officials allege that Moneypenny violated his probation because he failed to keep in touch with his probation officer for about six weeks.
- Charles Harmon, 19, of Twin Falls. Harmon originally was ordered to serve one year in jail, in lieu of a five-year prison term, for first-degree burglary. But last month, Judge Daniel Meehl agreed to release him to Set Free Ministeries of Twin Falls. However, Harmon was ejected from the halfway house for allegedly violating its rules.
- Anthony N. Arrien, 20, of Weiser. Arrien was placed on a two-year probation on Sept. 20, in lieu of a 10-year prison sentence, for first-degree burglary. He violated his probation when he was convicted last month of malicious injury to property and discharging a firearm within the city limits in Weiser.

In Moneypenny's case, defense lawyer Kathy Epeldi called the violation a technical one. Moneypenny was on the road looking for work and could not keep in contact with probation officials easily, she said.

Deputy prosecutor Dennis Voorhees argued that Moneypenny was obligated to make those contacts as a condition of his probation.

Monday in Fifth District Court, Judge Meehl said he was willing to extend the defendant's probation, provided that Moneypenny's claim of waiting employment in Wyoming is valid and that Wyoming probation officials can supervise his probation.

In Harmon's case, defense lawyer Mike Powers acknowledged that the defendant could not be forced on Set-Free Ministeries, but neither would a nine-month jail term do Harmon much good.

Powers noted that his client was prepared to attend college next year and a jail term could destroy those plans.

Meehl said he might consider probation and suggested that the defendant prepare a proposed probation plan for consideration.

Finally, Meehl delayed imposing sentence on Arrien, pending further investigation. Meehl said he wanted to study a transcript of the defendant's arraignment and conviction in Washington County.

Sex-case preliminary hearing delayed

TWIN FALLS — No decision emerged Monday in the preliminary hearing of a Buhl man charged with sexually abusing a 17-year-old girl.

Judge Charles Brumbach, of the Fifth District Magistrate Court in Twin Falls, ordered lawyers to submit written briefs in the case of 37-year-old Larry Allred, of Route 4, Buhl.

That means Brumbach won't decide for two weeks whether Allred should stand trial on a charge of committing an infamous crime against nature.

Allred is charged with abusing the girl between the summer months of ... and June of this year.

Californian charged with car burglary

TWIN FALLS — A California man was arraigned Monday in Twin Falls for allegedly burglarizing a car during the weekend.

Pete Vorda, 29, of Fremont, Calif., formally was charged with second-degree burglary and then released without bond.

Police have accused the defendant of entering a parked car, owned by Dennis McCracken of Twin Falls, on Sunday.

This week at CSI

TWIN FALLS — Here's this week's calendar of events at the College of Southern Idaho in Twin Falls that are open to the public.

State to close six cottages at facility for mentally retarded

NAMPA (UPI) — Six cottages that house mentally retarded children in a family setting at the Idaho State School and Hospital will be shut down at the first of the year in a cost-cutting move, the state director of Health and Welfare announced Monday.

Les Purce said he ordered the closures in response to a recommendation from a special study committee on operations at ISSH. The department made the results of that inquiry public Monday.

Besides supporting closure of the single-unit dwellings, committee members made broad recommendations calling for ISSH staff reorganization, building improvements and administrative reform.

Purce traveled to the facility, near Nampa, on Monday to discuss the committee report with staff workers at Idaho's only institution for the mentally retarded.

He said the cottage closure is part of a departmental effort to slash $1.2 million from the hospital's budget this fiscal year. Gov. John Evans this summer ordered his agency heads to reduce spending wherever possible to help ease an anticipated $70 million shortage in state revenue.

Children who had been staying in the cottages in small groups supervised by adults will be moved to dormitory-style living units, Purce said.

The average cost of housing a resident in a cottage is more than $37,000 a year, compared to about $32,670 if the patient lives in a dormitory, the director said.

He said 46 patients currently reside in the cottages, while 305 live in dormitories or other types of housing units. Shutting down the cottages will save about $203,000 yearly and result in the loss of about 15 staff positions, according to estimates by DHW officials.

Although closure of the cottages initially was considered three years ago, Purce said he delayed taking the action because some parents preferred that their children reside in the single-unit dwellings.

"Perhaps the higher costs of the cottages was justified when state revenues were adequate, and the cottages were used to prepare residents for independent living outside the institution," he said.

"However, in the last few years the resident population has been made up of the severely handicapped who cannot be placed in independent living situations."

He noted that several other recommendations handed down by the committee have already been adopted, as the department works to trim its spending.

Those suggestions include cutting eight supervisory positions at ISSH, improving accounting systems and streamlining administration at the facility, Purce said. Other recommendations made by the study panel included:

- Spending a total of about $85,000 to demolish four buildings at the ISSH site that no longer meet safety codes and cannot be remodeled at a reasonable cost.
- Allocating about $904,000 to upgrade seven buildings with new fire-control equipment, other safety features and energy-conservation devices. The committee estimated a strong energy conservation program at ISSH could save about $48,000 annually in fuel bills.
- Conducting an investigation into the more than $500,000 a year ISSH is charged for "central office administrative costs."
- Severely limiting the amount of overtime ISSH employees are allowed to work.
- Pursuing legislative changes to permit the department to collect payments from families with adult residents at ISSH.
- Discontinuing the 350 to 400 free meals that are served each day to ISSH employees.
- Establishing an employee-management relations committee.
- Creating several new positions, including a medical director who is a licensed physican, a controller and a program director.

Parents fear return to 'warehousing'

BOISE (UPI) — The planned shutdown of six cottages at the Idaho State School and Hospital has prompted fear that the move may signal a return to "warehousing" of the mentally retarded in large institutions, the head of a private organization said Monday.

The Idaho Department of Health and Welfare announced earlier in the day that the cottages will be closed next month as part of a cost-cutting measure, leaving parents with little choice but to place their mentally retarded children in a larger dormitory-style institution on the Nampa grounds, said Barbara Lowry, the executive director of the Association for Retarded Citizens of Ada County.

"I doubt they have any other alternative," she said. "What they're concerned about is not losing ground, so we're not going back to warehousing the way it used to be."

Lowry said the children receive better training in the small cottages than in the dormitory because they receive more personal attention in the home-like setting.

"I think it's very sad," she said. "Without a doubt, they get better service in the smaller cottages, where it's more individualized than in a large dorm."

The closure was the recommendation of a special study committee and is part of Health and Welfare's effort to slash $1.2 million from the hospital's budget this year, director Les Purce said.

Lowry said she sympathizes with the need to cut costs, but has reservations about closing the cottages to meet an expected state financial shortage.

"If I were in their shoes, I don't know what I would do," she said. "I just think it's too bad the handicapped so often are the first ones reduced in programs. These are people who can't help themselves. I think they need that kind of support."

Meadowlark's team goes 'off the road'

BOISE (UPI) — A van carrying eight members of Meadowlark Lemon's touring basketball team skidded on icy pavement Monday morning and rolled on Interstate 84, as the players traveled from Boise to an evening engagement in Moscow.

None of the players traveling in the van was hurt seriously, according to a team spokesman.

Lemon was traveling in a separate vehicle and was not involved in the accident, which occurred at about 11 a.m., according to Joe Albanese, the manager of the California Coasters, a team that has accompanied Lemon's Bucketeers on its tour of several Northwest cities.

Lemon and his teams had played a benefit game Sunday in Boise. Earlier last week, they had played a similar game in Twin Falls.

Albanese contacted at Holy Rosary Hospital in Ontario, said four of the basketball players had been treated for minor injuries and released. The four remaining players were admitted and were scheduled to be examined by doctors Monday evening, but Albanese said he did not believe any were hurt seriously in the crash.

Albanese said Lemon continued traveling to Moscow for a benefit game against a team that was to be assembled there. None of the members of Lemon's Bucketeers team was traveling in the wrecked van, which was carrying Coasters players, he said.

Lemon's club, modeled after the Harlem Globetrotters, has been performing for about four years and plays 200 to 250 games in the United States and abroad.

Idaho Power officials study regional fish-protection plan

BOISE (UPI) — Idaho Power Co. officials say it probably will be at least a year before they decide whether to comply with the Northwest Power Planning Council's regional fish-protection plan, although one council member says he had hoped the program would begin this spring.

The Boise-based utility is studying the council's plan for restoring migrating fish runs in the Columbia and Snake rivers to determine its impact on the company, spokesman Larry Taylor said Monday.

"I think we are taking a hard line on it," Taylor said. "We want to (participate), but not to the extent it would adversely affect our ratepayers."

Larry Mills, a council member from Idaho, said he had hoped the region's utilities would begin releasing water from dams in spring, but he said the eight-member body does not have authority to force compliance.

"I'd hoped it would get started sooner than that," Mills said. "The sooner they start that kind of program, the better off we all are. I think everybody would like to try this thing out as soon as possible. We've already gotten way behind on it."

The plan features a "water budget," which would devote a certain amount of water from Northwest dams to aid juvenile fish on their journey to the Pacific Ocean.

Taylor said the company has estimated it could lose as much as 300 megawatts of power in the summer by releasing water from its Hells Canyon dams for fish flows, rather than for generating electricity.

The company hesitates to release the water, as called for in the plan, unless the power losses are replaced with electricity from the federal Bonneville Power Administration, Taylor said.

He said discussions among officials are concerned more with how much water should be released than whether to refuse to comply at all.

He said it could take at least a year to determine whether transmission lines are capable of carrying the replacement power and what the overall impact of the fish plan would be.

Monday's snowfall sends Idaho drivers every which way

BOISE (UPI) — The year's first major snowfall in the Treasure Valley, a storm which was followed by thick fog, made driving an adventure for many area motorists Monday and shut down all air traffic for three hours at the Boise Municipal Airport.

Several injury accidents were reported, and Idaho State Police officers were busy untangling a pair of multi-vehicle wrecks on state highways in Ada County.

Snow began falling about 11 p.m. Sunday in the Boise area, and by morning, the National Weather Service had issued a travelers' advisory for all highways in the state.

Fog brought a halt to all incoming and outgoing flights at the Boise airport from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., according to tower manager Bob Rowland. Skies cleared in the afternoon, and all operations returned to normal, he said.

The U.S. Weather Service office in Boise reported that temperatures on Tuesday in southern Idaho would reach about 40 degrees, but increasing cloudiness in the afternoon will make snow a possibility throughout the evening, especially at higher elevations.

Idaho State troopers untangled a 12-vehicle crash on Idaho 20, at Firebird Raceway, and an eight-vehicle mishap at Idaho 16 and Ten Mile Road. No injuries were reported in either accident.

West of Caldwell, a four-vehicle accident blocked traffic for about two hours on Idaho 19, troopers said. Again, no injuries were reported.

State Transportation Department officials said plows and sanders were dispatched as soon as the snow began falling, but one district maintenance official said motorists could do more than anyone to ensure their own safety.

"About all you can do is go out and hold people's hands," said District 3 maintenance supervisor Norm Edwards. "People just have to slow down."

Monday rush-hour traffic in the Boise area was slowed in many places by minor accidents, according to law-enforcement officials.

Ada County sheriff's Capt. Tom Taylor said his office was investigating more than a dozen accidents, including several that involved injuries.

The storm, which dumped about two inches across southern Idaho, brought about twice as much to the Panhandle region.

In Coeur d'Alene, four inches fell by Monday afternoon. All schools were closed, and several minor power outages were reported to utilities. About seven inches of snow remains on the ground, the Weather Service reported.

More than seven inches of snow fell Sunday and Monday in Sandpoint, making travel extremely hazardous, according to law-enforcement officials. Winds gusting up to 21 mph caused drifts of up to 18 inches.

Weather Service officials in Sandpoint said they could not calculate the wind-chill factor because the snow and wind froze the measurement instrument.

Former teller admits to embezzling money from elderly

POCATELLO (UPI) — A St. Anthony woman admitted defrauding two elderly bank customers when she pleaded guilty to two counts of embezzlement Monday in U.S District Court.

Anita Olson, 32, is scheduled to be sentenced Feb. 23, by Judge Marion J. Callister, according to assistant U.S. attorney Donald Harris. She faces a possible maximum penalty of a $5,000 fine and a five-year prison term on each count, he said.

Olson admitted that she embezzled a total of $4,000 in two incidents in 1981, while she worked as a teller at a branch of the Valley Bank, he said.

In one instance in September 1981, Olson kept $2,500 of a woman's deposit when the customer ordered a $10,000 certificate of deposit, Harris said.

Nampa residents recall convicted CIA agent as 'all-around American'

NAMPA (UPI) — Residents of the quiet western Idaho town of Nampa say they remember Edwin P. Wilson, a former CIA agent charged with selling weapons to Libya and conspiring to murder exiled Libyan dissidents, as an "all-around American boy" who came from a strongly religious family.

Wilson, recently indicted on charges that he illegally aided Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy in 1976, grew up on a farm in Meridian. He attended junior high and high school in Nampa, before graduating in 1946 from an Ontario, Ore., high school just across the Idaho border.

A former neighbor of the 54-year-old man — who was in charge of obtaining materiel for the ill-fated Bay of Pigs invasion in 1961 and was convicted last month of conspiring to smuggle arms — said she has fond memories of Wilson.

"He came from a religious family, moral, law-abiding people," said Mildred Peterson of Meridian. She described the former Idahoan as "an all-around American boy."

Rita Fletcher of Nampa, Wilson's fourth-grade teacher, said she received a letter from the former espionage agent in March, 1976 — just three months before he allegedly began to deal with Khadafy.

"You were one of the great influences on my life and one of the very few teachers who really motivated me to get an education," Wilson wrote. "When we are young, we tend to forget to say 'thank yous' when they're due."

"He was a real diligent kid," the teacher said. "He wasn't intellectual or extremely brilliant; he was a very smart boy that adapted very well."

The educator added she believes "the desire for money" was what led Wilson into his troubles with the law.

Relatives of the man who at one time fled the United States for Tripoli declined to discuss Wilson. But one Nampan, Irene Huskey, 68, said she suspected Wilson lost contact with his parents and siblings after his legal troubles began.

"He had been really good to the family up to three years ago," she said. "But I guess when he saw trouble ahead, he lost contact with them."

Dallas heads Houston off with the pass

HOUSTON (UPI) — Danny White passed like there was no defense and Butch Johnson caught two touchdown passes in spite of the defense Monday night to establish the Dallas Cowboys as Texas' team as well as America's team.

White threw three scoring tosses in all, the first two to little-utilized wide receiver Johnson, as the Cowboys romped to a 37-7 win that gave the team with the national reputation bragging rights within the state.

"This was a big game," White said. "Playing them down here for the bragging rights of Texas was important to us. A win for them could have turned their season around."

White said the Cowboys are playing in sharp fashion.

"We're playing very well, but we've got to play very well for several more weeks. To do that, it will be a tremendous accomplishment," he said.

With the win, the Cowboys stayed with the New York Jets and Cincinnati Bengals as teams that are unbeaten in four games since resumption of the strike-torn season.

The rediscovery of Johnson, a former big-play artist, was made for the first time this season. He had caught only four passes until Monday night, but against the Oilers he was the lift the Cowboys needed.

"When given the opportunity," Johnson said, "I want to catch as many as I can to show people what I can do. Really, Danny is what makes this team go. He is our catalyst."

The last time the two Texas teams met in the regular season, 1979, the Oilers won 30-24 behind Earl Campbell's bullish runs — causing then-Oilers Coach Bum Phillips to observe: "If the Cowboys are America's team, we must be Texas' team."

Present Oilers Coach Ed Biles said, "The best team won tonight, but I thought we played well."

Dallas found it tough going on the ground against a frenzied Oilers' defense, so White went to the air. He struck for three touchdowns and completed 21-of-27 passes for 279 yards.

The Cowboys, 5-1, rolled up 416 yards on total offense and have ensured a winning record for the 17th consecutive season. Dallas and Washington are tied for first place in the NFC.

The Oilers, 1-5, jumped on top early with quarterback Archie Manning lofting a 54-yard scoring toss to Mike Renfro. But Johnson, who plays behind starting wide receivers Tony Hill and Drew Pearson, took a high arching pass over his shoulder in the back right corner of the endzone that allowed Dallas to tie the game early in the second quarter.

The first of Rafael Septien's three field goals, a 22-yarder midway through the second quarter, gave Dallas a 10-7 lead. In the waning moments of the half, White spotted Johnson in the endzone and threw him an 18-yard bullet for the score.

It marked the first time in Johnson's seven-year career with the Cowboys that he had caught two touchdown passes in the same game. In the first five games of this season, Johnson caught only four passes.

Before an Astrodome crowd of 51,808, Dallas used up almost five minutes in driving 77 yards for its first score, with Johnson catching a 21-yard pass on 2nd-and-18. On the next play, Tony Dorsett, who gained 65 yards on 18 carries, had to be helped from the field after a 4-yard gain, having suffered a sprained lower back. He returned later in the game.

Dorsett was replaced by Timmy Newsome, who promptly caught a 43-yard pass from White that put Dallas on the Oilers' 16. Dallas scored three plays later.

Dallas increased its lead to 20-7 with 4:39 remaining in the third quarter on a 36-yard field goal by Septien.

Dallas drove the ball from its 20 to the field goal, but the yardage was punctuated by a controversial play that aroused the Houston crowd.

On 1st-and-10 from the Houston 13, White came under a heavy rush and threw a desperation pass. Defensive end Malcolm Taylor picked the ball off and seemed headed for a 74-yard touchdown that would have put the Oilers only three behind. But referee Jim Tunney ruled White was in the grasp of a defender and that the play was dead.

With two minutes to play in the third quarter, just as Houston appeared ready to make a fight of it, the Oilers self-destructed and the Cowboys suddenly increased their lead to 27-7.

The Oilers had taken advantage of a fumbled punt by Ron Fellows to set up at the Cowboys' 34 and in three plays marched to the Dallas 7, where Houston had a 2nd-and-1.

Manning, who completed 12-of-33 passes for 199 yards, handed off to Gary Allen, the first time the Houston rookie running back touched the ball all night. He was trapped in his backfield and had the ball stripped from his grasp by defensive end Ed Jones. Michael Downs scooped it up at the Houston 14. Downs ran untouched for the 86-yard score, with Manning desperately chasing him 15 yards behind.

The Cowboys turned the game into a rout early in the fourth quarter, producing a TD to make it 34-7 on a 46-yard pass from White to Newsome.

Dallas had a 3rd-and-9 when White hit Newsome in the flat.

Buhl's Karl Easton, who led all scorers with 13 points, drives by Burley's Tani Newcomb

Buhl girls improve to 8-1 by routing Burley, 50-26

BUHL — Continuing their season-long success, the Buhl Indians collected their eighth victory in nine games Monday night, defeating the Burley Bobcats in a girls basketball game, 50-26.

After taking a 14-7 first-quarter lead, the Indians scored just five points in the second period to take a 19-11 advantage into halftime.

But Buhl compensated in the second half, scoring 31 points over the remainder of the game to run away from Burley, which fell to 6-5.

Not much was spectacular about the Indians' triumph. "It was kind of a low-keyed ballgame, in a way," Buhl Coach Janet Smutny said. "We just did what we had to do tonight."

One of the tasks the Indians had to do was crack Burley's press, which came in halfcourt and 3-2 trap varieties. "We really didn't have a lot of problems with it," Smutny said. Though the Indians rarely scored off their press-break plays, Smutny said that they were "able to set up and run a good offense."

Smutny admitted that Buhl didn't face the Bobcats at their best. She cited that Burley traveled to Rexburg for a game against Madison this past weekend, and thus might have been weakened from fatigue.

"They played tired and flat. We know they're a much better ball team than they way they played tonight," Smutny said of the Bobcats. "Their shots just weren't falling."

Buhl's Kari Easton led all scorers with 13 points, while Taci Hulse contributed 12 for the Indians, who resume action Friday in the Elko, Nev., Tournament. Burley travels to Mountain Home Thursday.

Buhl also won the junior varsity game, 49-37.

Walker proves he's a real hero

ATHENS, Ga. (UPI) — Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker bolted from a crowd of gawkers "like John Wayne" and ripped open the door of an overturned, smoking car to rescue a 67-year-old woman trapped inside, witnesses said Monday.

More awards for Walker—B7

Ted Shanks, an employee of the University of Georgia's Environmental Safety Service, said he was trying in vain to pull open the smashed door Sunday when Walker arrived.

The husky 220-pound running back, clad in a sweatsuit, grabbed the door to free Jessie Dye, then "jogged off into the sunset," said University of Georgia Police Chief Asa Boynton.

"When he pulled the door it shocked me how it came loose," Shanks said. "He got ahold of something because he just ripped that thing loose. I had pulled on it before and couldn't budge it. I wouldn't have been able to do it alone.

"He just ripped the door open, glass shattered everywhere and then we got her out," Shanks said.

Shanks said he was unaware at first that it was Walker who was helping him.

"I didn't—even recognize him," Shanks said, "In the heat of the moment there was no communication. We were just working together to get her out.

"It floored me when we stood up and I looked over her into his face," Shanks said. "I was so involved with the wreck and it's like you look up and there's John Wayne helping you."

He said he and Walker pulled the woman to safety while a crowd of about a dozen people looked on.

"After we got her out I knew Herschel wouldn't want to stand around while the crowd gathered, so I told him my wife had already called an ambulance so he could go on if he wanted to and he did," she said.

Shanks said he watched as Mrs. Dye's car slammed broadside into another car and flipped over in front of his home. He said he ran out into the street in his stocking feet while a crowd of onlookers gathered.

"The truth of the matter is I was a little upset ... that no one stepped forward except Herschel," Shanks said, adding he was impressed by Walker's selflessness.

"It just impressed me to no end that he'd step forward with so much to lose, that he'd stick his hand in a (smoking) car for a lady he didn't know," Shanks said.

Bannister decides to sign with White Sox

CHICAGO (UPI) — Pitcher Floyd Bannister, the most sought-after free agent in this year's re-entry draft, Monday agreed in principal to a five-year contract with the Chicago White Sox.

White Sox board chairman Jerry Reinsdorf and club president Eddie Einhorn said Bannister would sign Wednesday.

Financial terms were not announced but it was believed to be for approximately $4.5 million.

The White Sox indicated two other clubs outbid them for the 27-year-old left-hander, who pitched last season for the Seattle Mariners.

"But Floyd indicated he wanted to play in Chicago and that money wasn't the principal issue," Einhorn said. Bannister, drafted by 16 teams, led the American League in strikeouts in 1982 with 209. He finished the season with a 12-13 record and a 3.43 ERA in 247 innings. In 35 starts, Bannister hurled three shutouts.

Bannister had reportedly narrowed his choices to St Louis, Philadelphia, Kansas City and the White Sox.

"Our ballpark was certainly a consideration because of its size," Reinsdorf said. "He proved to us that he wanted to play here and that was his prime consideration."

Bannister also has a sister living in the Chicago area.

New White Sox pitching Coach Dave Duncan, hired after the 1982 season, served as Bannister's pitching coach in Seattle and White Sox general manager Roland Hemond conceded that was a factor.

"In addition, Carlton Fisk and Tom Paciorek, who played with Bannister, talked to him and helped us in the negotiations," Hemond said.

Bannister had said he also wanted to play with the team that had good defense and strong bullpen, two elements that were missing during Chicago's third place finish in the American League Western division.

Hemonds indicated the acquisition of Bannister, a native of Pierre, S.D., would not only open up trading avenues for his team, but for the rest of the major league clubs.

"We're deep now," Hemond said.

Murtaugh still atop A-4; Bruins drop

By United Press International

The Meridian Warriors, unbeaten in four starts, led the list again this week as Idaho high school coaches cast ballots for the top boys basketball teams in A-1 play. Rigby and Soda Springs tied for the premier spot in the A-2 division.

Fruitland repeated as the coaches' favorite in A-3, and Murtaugh returned to the top of the A-4 roster.

The Warriors, now 4-0, were the undisputed No. 1 choice of prep coaches in a survey released Monday by UPI. Meridian has held the top position since pre-season rankings were issued two weeks ago.

The squad trounced Pocatello, 71-46, Friday, and defeated Highland, 43-40, earlier in the week to preserve its perfect mark.

Meridian was followed in the poll by Coeur d'Alene, Twin Falls, Boise and Caldwell.

Coaches were split between Soda Springs, 3-0, and Rigby, 3-1, as the top team in the A-2 division.

Madison, which held the No. 1 spot last week, fell to the fourth position behind Jerome after the Bobcat record dropped to 2-2. St. Maries rounded out the top five.

In A-3, Fruitland retained its top ranking by boosting its season mark to 3-0. The Grizzlies were followed by three other unbeaten teams — Kimberly, Parma and Malad — and by Prairie, now 4-1.

Coaches agreed Murtaugh was still the top squad in A-4 after two weeks of play. The Red Devils moved their record to 4-1 last week by beating Valley, 44-39, then dropping a match to Kimberly, 43-40.

Meridian (4-0)	40
Coeur d'Alene (2-3)	35
Twin Falls (2-1)	33
Boise (2-1)	21

Others receiving votes: Salmon River, Troy, Nez Perce, Council and Carey.

Virginia stays No. 1 in cage rankings

NEW YORK (UPI) — The University of Virginia, which turned back the challenge of Georgetown last week, retained its No. 1 college basketball rating while the Hoyas dropped four places to No. 7 Monday following balloting by UPI's Board of Coaches.

The Cavaliers, led by Ralph Sampson's 23 points, 16 rebounds and seven blocked shots topped Georgetown and its center, Patrick Ewing, 68-63 in boosting their record to 6-0. Virginia collected 34 first-place votes and 580 points from 39 of the 42 coaches who participated in this week's balloting.

Kentucky, 5-0 after victories over Detroit and Illinois, remained No. 2 with five first-place votes and 556 points, while UCLA, 4-0, inched up to No. 3 with 435 points.

Memphis State, 6-0, moved to No. 4, followed by No. 5 Indiana, No. 6 Iowa, No. 7 Georgetown, No. 8 Missouri, No. 9 Alabama and No. 10 St. John's (N.Y.).

RALPH SAMPSON
Game against Hoyas a key

Memphis State defeated Kent State and Tennessee State last week and also moved up one position from a week ago. Undefeated Indiana, on the strength of triumphs over Notre Dame, Eastern Michigan and Wyoming, advanced two spots, while Iowa, 5-0, remained sixth after two victories last week.

Georgetown, 6-1, had defeated Alabama-State before suffering its first loss of the year on Saturday. Missouri, 5-0 after three triumphs last week, remained eighth, while Alabama, 4-0, moved up two places and St. John's, 7-0, advanced three spots.

Louisville, 5-1, is 11th, followed by No. 12 Tennessee, No. 13 Arkansas, No. 14 Houston and No. 15 Syracuse, which stretched its record to 6-0 with its 92-87 upset of Houston. The Cougars, 5-1, were 10th last week, while Syracuse was unranked.

North Carolina, 3-2, is 16th, followed by North Carolina State, No. 18 Villanova, which dropped nine positions; No. 19 Nevada-Las Vegas and No. 20 Illinois State.

The complete ratings list:

1. Virginia (34) (6-0)	580
2. Kentucky (5) (5-0)	556

Shoshone hangs on to shade Gooding

Girls basketball

SHOSHONE — The Gooding Senators nearly shook off the weight of a scoreless first quarter, but the Shoshone Indians held on for a 42-39 Canyon Conference girls basketball triumph Monday night.

After building a commanding lead, Shoshone found itself ahead by just one point in the fourth quarter. But baskets by Lisa Logosz and Clarin Osborn gave the Indians some breathing room.

Again the relentless Senators closed to within one, 40-39. But Shoshone answered the challenge once more. With 7 seconds left, Taunia Kerner scored for Shoshone, drawing a foul in the process. She missed the bonus free throw, but the Indians rebounded, settling matters as time ran out.

Shoshone led 31-19 midway through the third quarter when Gooding began its comeback. The Senators took advantage of four fouls on Osborn, which sent her to the bench for much of the third period and most of the fourth.

Nevertheless, Osborn led all scorers with 20 points, doing most of her damage inside. Logosz added 12 for the Indians, 10-2 overall and 4-2 in the conference.

Explaining Gooding's goose egg in the first quarter, Shoshone Coach Ed Sandy said the Senators "just couldn't buy a basket. They didn't really get particularly good shots; nothing from inside. They were mostly shooting from outside and they didn't shoot well."

Julie Clemons recovered in time to pour in 17 points for the Senators, 2-9 overall and 2-5 in the conference. Gooding visits Jerome tonight, while Shoshone travels to Declo Thursday.

Shoshone captured the junior varsity contest, 44-34.

Gooding	0	12	15	13—39

Gooding — Johansen 1 0-0 2, Fonseeco 4 0-2 8, Graves 3 0-0 6, Clemons 4 9-11 17, Yore 3 0-0 6. Totals 15 9-13 39. Fouls 18. Fouled out — Yore.

Shoshone — Osborn 8 4-9 20, Norman 1 0-1 2, Fitzgerald 1 4-7 6, Logosz 6 0-0 12, Kerner 1 0-2 2. Totals 17 8-19 42. Fouls 13.

Hagerman 40, C'ford 24

HAGERMAN — Taking advantage of Castleford's man-to-man defense, Kristin McFadden scored 19 points and Audra Wagner added 11 Monday night to lead the Hagerman Pirates to a 40-24 triumph over the Wolves in a Magic Valley Conference girls game.

Castleford's defensive alignment afforded the Pirates the opportunity to pass inside to the 5-11½ McFadden and the 5-10 Wagner for close-in scoring attempts. McFadden had to sit out much of the third quarter with four fouls, but Wagner picked up the scoring slack during that period and in the final quarter.

Hagerman improved to 6-3 overall and 2-1 in the conference. Castleford fell to 1-5 and 0-5.

Bucks lose Lanier to surgeon's knife

MILWAUKEE (UPI) — Bob Lanier of the Milwaukee Bucks will have arthroscopic surgery on his right knee and be sidelined four to eight weeks, the team said Monday.

Lanier, 34, hurt his knee last month and missed several games before coming back for the last two contests. He had 22 points and 8 rebounds Sunday in a victory over Indiana but the knee still bothered him.

"Sure this is disappointing to me," the 6-foot-11, 250-pound center said. "But we had a meeting and considered the options and this was the one we agreed on. I couldn't continue playing on it, so something had to be done."

The 13-year veteran has been bothered by his knees for many years and has had several operations. He played in 18 of Milwaukee's 23 games this year, averaging 12.5 points and 5.7 rebounds.

Lanier will have the surgery Wednesday at Elmbrook Hospital. It will be performed by Dr. David Haskell, the club's orthopedic advisor.

Haskell recommended surgery after he examined Lanier. Haskell said the operation will get rid of a loose bone particle in the knee and will be a general "rinsing out" of other particles.

In August 1981, Haskell did similar surgery on Lanier and he came back to have a healthy, productive season.

"It's hard at this time in my career after having had surgery before and being older (34) when recuperation is more difficult," Lanier said. "But I'm looking forward to coming back."

Coach Don Nelson admitted it is "another blow to our ballclub" but said his team, which leads the Central Division with a 15-8 record, will survive.

"We've still got a good club," he said. "We're going to miss Bob, no doubt about that. But with Harvey Catchings playing like he is it makes it easier."

Catchings, 6-10, has been Lanier's backup and has been playing well.

Nelson also said he will use Dave Cowens at center, the position where Cowens was an All-Star with the Boston Celtics.

But Cowens, who is coming off a two-year self-imposed retirement, has played forward this year and had been sidelined with a muscle tear in his knee until Sunday's game. He failed to score against the Pacers in 12 minutes.

College basketball

FRESNO, Calif. (UPI) — Ron Anderson scored 16 points while teammates Bernard Thompson and Desi Barmore added 14 each Monday night in lifting the Fresno State Bulldogs to a 65-49 victory over Boise State.

The Broncos held a 16-15 lead over the Bulldogs with 11 minutes to go in the first half when Fresno State took command. The Bulldogs ended with a 34-26 halftime lead.

The Bulldogs improved their record to 6-1 while the Broncos, led by Rawn Hayes with 12, dropped to 1-6.

Oklahoma 99, Idaho State 75

NORMAN, Okla. (UPI) — Waymon Tisdale scored 25 points and Bo Overton broke the Oklahoma career assist mark with seven to lead the Sooners to a 99-75 win over Idaho State Monday night.

Overton's assists boosted his career total to 359, surpassing the previous mark of 353 established by Raymond Whitley.

Mike Williams scored the first basket of the game on a short jumper from the lane to give Idaho State its only lead of the night. By halftime, the Sooners had built a 53-21 advantage and Oklahoma streched the margin to 37 points midway though the second half.

"At times we played wel, but at other imes we went to sleep," said Sooner Coach Billy Tubbs. "This is the last of these kind of games for awhile. We need to be in some closer games."

Chucky Barnett suffered a sprained ankle in the first half, but Tubbs said "nothing was broken. It will be in a cast for a couple of days and then we'll see how it is."

Jackie Fleury led the Bengals with 20 points, followed by Williams with 14, as Idaho State slipped to 3-4 for the season.

Five Sooners hit double figures in helping OU reach a 5-2 mark. David Little and Jan Pannell followed Tisdale with 15 points each, while Overton and Calvin Pierce each scored 14 points.

Utah 62, Weber State 52

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Peter Williams and reserve Chris Winans each scored 12 points Monday night in leading Utah to a 62-52 victory over previously-unbeaten Weber State, ending the Wildcats' 7-game winning streak.

Winans, forced into the lineup for ailing 7-foot center Dave Cecil, hit five of his six shots from the field. And with help from Utah's forwards, Winans held Weber State center Tom Heywood to just two points.

After Weber State coach Neil McCarthy was ejected with 13 minutes to go for complaining about the officials' failure to call a foul against Utah on a layup by Wildcat guard Tom Larry, his players scored four consecutive baskets to cut the Utes' lead down to just 43-41.

But, a basket by Williams and two by Angelo Robinson got Utah going again. Pace Mannion added 10 points for the Utes, now 4-3 on the season with all their wins at home.

Weber State was led by Royal Edwards with 10 points and reserve Matt Hafterson's nine. The Wildcats are now 7-1, after getting off to their best season start ever.

Utah shot 58 percent to the Wildcats' 48, and outrebounded Weber State 26-21.

Missouri 76, Eastern Illinois 61

COLUMBIA, Mo. (UPI) — Steve Stipanovich scored 21 points to lead three Missouri players in double figures and pace the eighth-ranked Tigers to a 76-61 victory Monday night over Eastern Illinois.

Jon Sundvold and Greg Cavener each added 15 points for the Tigers, 6-0. It was the sixth loss for winless Eastern Illinois.

The Tigers scored 13 consecutive first-half points to build an early lead before coasting to the victory. Missouri held the Panthers scoreless over a five-minute stretch late in the first half.

Missouri held a 41-24 advantage at halftime. Eastern Illinois was able to narrow that gap to 10 points with eight minutes remaining as junior Tim Dykstra hit four long jumpers.

Michigan State 70, Cincinnati 69

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Larry Polec made two free throws with 12 seconds left Monday night to lift Michigan State to a 70-69 decision over Cincinnati.

Polec put the Spartans ahead 70-67. Eight seconds later, Kevin Gaffney hit a 17-footer to put UC within a point. With one second left, Myron Hughes of UC missed a 20-foot baseline shot that would have won it for the Bearcats.

With the score 21-21, Michigan State ran off 9 straight points to make it 30-21 with 4:22 left in the half. Four of those points came on shots by Sam Vincent, who led all scorers with 22 points.

The Spartans led 33-25 at halftime but Cincinnati took a 65-64 lead with a little more than a minute left.

Michigan State, 5-1, was also led by Derek Perry with 18 points and Kevin Willis with 12. Mark Doris had 15 points for UC, 4-1, while Derrick McMillan added 10.

Georgia Tech 85, Sewanee 41

ATLANTA (UPI) — Freshman guard Mark Price tossed in 18 points and all five Georgia Tech starters scored in double figures Monday night, carrying the Yellow Jackets to an 85-41 rout of the University of the South.

Tech, 3-1, led 39-19 lead at halftime and stretched the margin to 48 points with five minutes remaining.

For Tech, Danny Pearson had 17 points and Maurice Bradford, John Salley and George Thomas had 12 points each. Tech outrebounded its opponent 47-34. Rick Blackburn and Jim Folds led the University of the South with 8 points each.

Illinois 79, Vanderbilt 77

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (UPI) — Anthony Welch, who scored 28 points, sank two free throws in the second overtime to give Illinois a 79-77 victory over Vanderbilt Monday night.

Welch, a 6-foot-9 sophomore, forced the second overtime with a basket at the buzzer to make it 75-75.

The Illini, avenging a loss to Vanderbilt in the Alaska Shootout last month, raised their record to 6-2 while the Commodores fell to 5-2.

Vanderbilt, which made 25-of-28 free throws, hit 7-of-9 foul shots in the first overtime but Welch scored at the buzzer to send the game into the extra period. With 15 seconds left and Illinois leading 77-75, Welch made both ends of a 1-and-1. Bill Cox hit a layup with a second to go for the final margin. The score was 66-66 after regulation.

Efrem Winters scored 21 points for Illinois. Vanderbilt was led by Cox and Jeff Turner with 18 points each. Cox made four free throws to extend his string to 39 in a row. Illinois shot 55 percent from the field.

Cornell 68, Cleveland State 59

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Kent Bantum scored 26 points, including 10-of-10 free throws, to spark Cornell to a 68-59 victory over Cleveland State Monday night.

The Big Red, 3-4, pulled to a 35-21 halftime lead and increased its advantage to 16 points early in the second half. The Vikings pulled to 56-52 with 6:17 remaining. However, the Big Red scored the next 5 points for a 61-52 advantage with 4:57 to go.

Brad Bomba and George Hall added 12 points apiece for Cornell. Cleveland State's 6-foot-11 guard Jim Les had 14 points and 8 rebounds. Steve Corbin added 13 points and Dave Colbert 11 for the CSU, 1-3.

USC sophomore center explains why he quit basketball team

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Ken Johnson, who led the Pacific-10 Conference in blocked shots and Southern Cal in rebounding as a freshman, says he quit the team last week because Coach Stan Morrison's offense is too structured.

The 6-foot-9 sophomore center said in a interview published in today's Los Angeles Times that he may transfer to Georgetown or Louisville because he couldn't grow as a player at USC.

"It would be selfish of me to have Coach Morrison reconstruct the offense to accommodate me — to allow me to achieve individual goals," Johnson said.

Johnson said he respects Morrison and didn't leave because of personal differences with the coach or his teammates.

Specifically, Johnson said he didn't believe he could develop his jump shot or ballhandling at USC. As a freshman, Johnson primarily played a defensive and rebounding role.

At the outset of this season, Morrison said Johnson would be more involved in the offense. But Johnson quit after the first game, a loss to Oral Roberts that Morrison said upset his young center.

The USC coach disputed Johnson's contention that USC's offense is designed for guards and forwards.

"I have no hangup with our offense," Morrison said. "I think it's an equal opportunity offense. Naturally, some people will be more aggressive offensively and they'll be the leading scorers, given the execution of the offense."

Massachusetts arena attracts Hagler-Sibson

WORCESTER, Mass. (UPI) — Marvin Hagler will defend his world middleweight title on Feb. 11 against British champion Tony Sibson at the Worcester Centrum, civic center officials announced Monday.

"We have got the fight. It will take place on Friday, Feb. 11. We are ecstatic," said Centrum Publicist Brian Weiner, who received confirmation of the bout late Monday morning.

It was a feather in the cap of New England's newest large coliseum — which made its debut Sept. 2 with a gala Frank Sinatra opening. The Centrum beat out the Boston Garden, where Hagler has boxed several times before.

Weiner said the fight would be the largest sporting event to be housed at the new 13,000 seat coliseum.

"Certainly in the area of sports, it's hands down the biggest thing we've had, or will have, for a while. For the first fight to be the world champion fighting the top world contender, you can't have a better match and you just can't get a bigger forumula for success," he said.

Some skippers think high salaries negate authority; others disagree

By JOHN LINDBLOM
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

HONOLULU — Before leaving as manager of the California Angels, Gene Mauch took note of the dramatic change in the leverage he once had in dealing with players. Money — more precisely, the taking of it — no longer could be used to enforce discipline, he said.

"These guys have all the money in the world," he said. "Now, you simply have to appeal to their pride as a motivating factor."

Steve Boros, new manager of the Oakland A's, is well aware of the changes wrought by the multimillion-dollar, multiyear contracts under which many of today's players perform.

"It's a tough thing to deal with," Boros said. "Before the ink is dry, you know that you're a lame duck."

Boros, 46, has a one-year contract to manage the A's. There are more than a handful of players on his roster who have contracts three or four times as long. More than a few of them can count on making three or four times Boros' annual salary.

So, how do you manage a millionaire? If, in fact, you do.

A number of managers in Honolulu for last week's winter baseball meetings said that, yes, it indeed is possible to manage them. But most agreed that the advent of free agency and the long-term contract have ushered in a whole new set of problems.

RENE LACHEMANN
Stresses incentive

Among the most severe ones:

• Discipline. "A fine used to be $100, and you'd feel it, but now you don't feel it," said the San Francisco Giants' Frank Robinson. "So, you've got to put enough on it (the fine), so they'll say, 'Hey, I better not do that again.' But if you fine them enough to where it hurts, now they'll go out and file a grievance against you. Now, you got to go and battle that. And you can sit them down. Oh, sure, you can, but you've got to understand that he is a valuable part of your ballclub when you're paying him that much money. So, you're cutting off your nose to spite your face, and you're not only punishing him, you're punishing the other 24 players in the lineup, and the fans and the front office and the whole organization."

• Teamwork. "The statistics are the one place where the game has changed," said the Chicago White Sox's Tony LaRussa. "The player takes his stats to the arbitrators and throws them at them. You're a manager, and you're trying to deal with playing for the team and giving up an at-bat to advance a runner. But the guy's thinking, 'I may give up a chance to drive in a run, and if I do this 30 times over the course of the year, I may lose 10 or 15 ribbies (runs batted in). You've got to find a way to get through that; you've got to find a way to take the emphasis off the stats."

• Incentive. "If a player is struggling in the first year of his five-year contract, you've got to continually try to pump that individual up," said Seattle's Rene Lachemann. "You put a guy like that away, now you've destroyed that guy for four more years and you're going to have him for four more years — if you're there that long. There have been some players in the past who have said, 'OK, I've got four years, and I don't give a damn. Whatever I'm going to do, I'm going to do it.' That's going to be tough for the manager."

• Free agency. "You can't plan on having a player continue playing for you, because he can become a free agent," said Pittsburgh's Chuck Tanner. "It may take four years for you to develop a ballplayer. And the next two years when he starts to be productive and play the way you feel he's going to play, he's gone, because you can't satisfy him financially. Omar Moreno (whom the Pirates lost to Houston last week for a five-year contract worth $3.25 million) is an excellent example of that. There were a lot of center fielders competing for the job during the time he was struggling and hitting .230 and .225. But I played him regularly. Then Houston acquired him, and now we've got to get another player."

The disparity between the contract of the manager and the contracts of players is ever widening, just as it is widening between players and the general public. It is not a healthy future that this unique imbalance is creating. There certainly is the possibility of anarchy in any situation where most of the workers are assured of making more money for a longer period than their supervisors.

Perhaps, as LaRussa said, "If a manager is doing a good job with all that, he should make more money."

JOHN McNAMARA
Says job isn't tougher

But Dick Williams, a manager who never was influenced by the size of a player's paycheck when it came to disciplining them, says the task is no different now than it was 10 years ago.

"It hasn't changed my job any," said the crusty San Diego manager, whose benching of George Scott and Carl Yastrzemski preceded his firing several years ago in Boston. "Maybe it's the reason I've gone from place to place, but we're going to do it the way I want it done."

California's manager, John McNamara, operates under a more democratic code than the imperialistic Williams. But his logic is much the same.

"It's still basically the human element," he said. "The contract thing is business. The baseball begins when they sign their contracts. It depends on what kind of organization you have and how you fit into the environment. But personally and individually, I haven't found it difficult. I don't care how much a man's making, I can still communicate and give him orders. It has changed with the big money, but if you're in a winning environment, they police themselves."

The most effective implement the contemporary manager has at his disposal to keep the millionaire player in line is solid backing from the organization.

"You can tell the guy, 'Look, you sold our ownership on a five-year contract for hundreds of thousands of dollars, fine, but I'm making my living on wins and losses,'" LaRussa said. "If your ownership backs you up on that, you can take away from the player who says, 'You have to play me.'"

LaRussa made the one point that seems appropriate about modern managers:

"If a manager is doing a good job now, he's contributing more than ever before."

Quarterback woes

St. Louis' Lomax vents frustration after another home defeat

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — The St. Louis Cardinals can't seem to win at home and it's starting to unnerve quarterback Neil Lomax.

For the third straight time this season and for the fifth consecutive game over the past two years, the Cardinals lost a home game Sunday, falling 12-7 to the Washington Redskins.

The Cardinals, who beat Atlanta and Philadelphia on the road the previous two weeks, trailed 12-0 in the fourth quarter and were deep in their own territory when Lomax' frustration climaxed after a pass attempt fell incomplete.

With boos cascading from the stands, Lomax dismissed the fans with a wave of his arm.

"The fans got on us and I got on myself," Lomax said. "I was more upset at myself. I wasn't ticked off at anybody except me. But this is our city. And sometimes they still get on our back.

"As a young person, I need the support of my teammates and the fans. As a young person, it hurts you emotionally to think that your own fans aren't pulling for you and that they can get down on you so quickly."

The fans cheered when the second-year quarterback was relieved by veteran Jim Hart, who directed the Cardinals on a scoring drive and then almost pulled out the victory with a last-second desperation pass into the end zone.

Lomax watched while Hart, who also has been booed on more than one occasion by the hometown fans, completed 7-of-12 passes for 91 yards, including the touchdown, in his second relief appearance in the last four games.

"It's the role that I have and it's what I'm supposed to do," Hart said.

Lomax, while happy for Hart, said he would have liked to remain in the game even though the Cardinals had not been able to score in the first three quarters. He had completed 8-of-14 passes for 160 yards.

"I know I have to have situtations like that where we're behind in the fourth quarter," Lomax said. "I've got to get game experience in those situations. We were moving the ball, we just couldn't score."

Penalties and three fumbles hurt the Cardinals, who fell to 3-3 with three games remaining. St. Louis plays at Chicago Sunday and then finishes the regular season with a home game against the New York Giants and a rematch against the Redskins in Washington.

Honors keep coming for Herschel Walker

ATLANTA (UPI) — Herschel Walker garnered more honors Monday.

Already winner of the Heisman Trophy and All-America for the third straight year, Georgia's junior tailback Monday was named UPI's College Player of the Year.

In addition, Walker, who enhanced his legend Sunday by rescuing a woman trapped in a wrecked car (see Page B5), also was chosen as UPI's College Back of the Year.

The 225-pound speedster, now third on the NCAA career rushing list with 5,259 yards in three seasons during which he also scored 52 touchdowns, was the overwhelming choice of sportswriters and sportscasters for both UPI awards — outballoting runnrup John Elway, Stanford's All-America quarterback, 74-27, for Player of the Year and All-America running back Eric Dickerson of Southern Methodist, 78-29, for Back of the Year.

Walker got off to a slow start this season after breaking his right thumb in pre-season practice. He was used primarily as a decoy in Georgia's opener against defending national champion Clemson — a game he wasn't expected to play in — and gained only 20 yards.

Playing with the thumb in a heavy cast, Walker also was below par his next two games but finally returned to form in the fourth game of the season when he rushed for 215 yards against Mississippi State. Averaging only 96 yards his first three games, Walker averaged 183 the final eight to wind up with 1,752 yards and 17 touchdowns.

His 159.3 yards per game average, although 12.6 less than his sophomore average, made him the nation's No. 2 major college rusher behind Ernest Anderson of Oklahoma State.

With a season yet to play, Walker is only 823 yards shy of Tony Dorsett's NCAA career rushing record (6,082) and is only seven touchdowns shy of the career record (59) shared by Dorsett and Glenn Davis.

With Walker, who had 55 runs of more than 10 yards this fall, its primary weapon, top-ranked Georgia posted its second perfect season in three years and will be gunning for its second national championship in three years when it plays second-ranked Penn State in the Sugar Bowl.

"Since Herschel joined our team in 1980, we are 33-2," said Georgia Coach Vince Dooley.

K.C. fans clamor for Elway after Chiefs' signal-callers sacked

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — After the fifth sack of Kansas City quarterback Steve Fuller by the Los Angeles Raiders Sunday, the sparse crowd at Arrowhead Stadium began chanting "Elway, Elway, Elway."

The first sack in the fourth quarter of Fuller's replacement, Bill Kenney, brought even louder chanting from the crowd of 26,307 for the All-America quarterback from Stanford, who has a good chance of being the first player taken in the 1983 college draft.

Kenney quieted the crowd later in the period when he completed four passes for 72 yards in an 85-yard drive for Kansas City's lone touchdown of the day, a 1-yard run by Billy Jackson, that gave the Chiefs a 16-14 lead with 1:55 remaining.

But disenchantment with the entire Kansas City team returned when Jim Plunkett threw a 35-yard touchdown pass to Calvin Muhammad with 25 seconds left to salvage a 21-16 victory for the Raiders. Their fourth straight post-strike loss officially eliminated the Chiefs from playoff contention with a 1-5 record.

Kansas City figures to be an underdog in all three of its remaining games — at Denver next week and then home to finish the season against defending Super Bowl champion San Francisco and the 5-1 New York Jets — and could conceivably win the John Elway sweepstakes.

But Kenney doesn't think the coaching staff should quit on its two current quarterbacks just yet.

"I firmly believe I'm going to be a very good player and I believe Steve is going to be a very good player," Kenney said. "But for one us to stand out, it's going to take a lot of playing time, a lot of dedication and a lot of work. When you're in a situation (two quarterbacks) like this, it's tough."

Kenney completed 9-of-15 passes for 134 yards in that fourth quarter against the Raiders but his final three incompletions were heaves in the closing moments after Los Angeles had taken the lead. Fuller completed 10-of-21 passes for 136 yards before his departure.

Kenney opened the season as Kansas City's starting quarterback and engineered the club's lone victory, a 19-12 pre-strike triumph over the San Diego Chargers. But after the Chiefs were shelled 27-17 by New Orleans in the first post-strike game, Kenney was replaced as the starter by Fuller.

Kenney thought he had been short-changed by head Coach Marv Levy and said so. But two weeks on the sidelines mellowed Kenney out and it was with a fresh, new attitude that he came off the bench against the Raiders.

College coach improving after heart attack

COLUMBIA, S.C. (UPI) — South Carolina basketball Coach Bill Foster remained in guarded condition Monday, but doctors said Foster's heart had "stabilized nicely" since Sunday.

Foster, 52, was taken to the cardiac care unit at Providence Hospital Saturday night after suffering a moderate heart attack during the Gamecocks' 59-53 upset of 15th-ranked Purdue.

Dr. Richard Umbach, Foster's cardiologist, said he took the coach off blood thinners and other medication Monday morning. He also removed pacemaker wires that were inserted in Foster's chest as a precaution.

Umbach said a pacemaker was not needed, and Foster was "doing as well as can be expected."

"During the past 24 hours, Coach Foster has stabilized nicely," Umbach said in a statement released through Tom Price, sports information director for the university.

Price, who described Foster as healthy but "a very hyper person," said Umbach declined to speculate how long the coach would be in the hospital, nor would he estimate how long his recovery would take.

On Sunday, Price said Foster would be out "at least a couple of weeks and would definitely have a recuperative period after that. He's not going to come back to work in the next few weeks. It's going to be a while."

Steve Steinwedel, an assistant coach, is in charge of the South Carolina squad in Foster's absence.

The Gamecocks, 4-2 this season, entertain Rider College Saturday night. Then they are idle until Jan. 3 when they meet Richmond in Columbia.

Sports briefs

Erickson, Quiller get awards

BOISE (UPI) — University of Idaho football Coach Dennis Erickson and Idaho State cross-country mentor Jerry Quiller were named Monday as the Big Sky Conference's "Coaches of the Year."

The selections, made by the eight athletic directors in the conference, were announced by Big Sky Commissioner Ron Stephenson.

Erickson, in his rookie season as a coach at Moscow, led the Vandals to a 9-4 record and a berth in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs. UI was eliminated from title contention when it was defeated earlier this month by Eastern Kentucky in a quarterfinal game.

When Erickson arrived on campus, the Vandals had just come off a 0-7 season in Big Sky play and 3-8 overall.

Quiller, in his third season at Idaho State, paced the Bengals to their second straight Big Sky Conference cross-country title this year and a second consecutive appearance in the NCAA championships — where they finished 18th.

Conference's top cager: Pope

BOISE (UPI) — Montana is off to its best start in 32 years, and the big reason has been 6-foot-6 senior forward Derrick Pope — the Big Sky Conference's latest player of the week.

Pope earned the league's weekly honor Monday for his performances in unbeaten Montana's victories No. 6 and No. 7 last week, against Southern Utah State and Washington State.

Pope played only 17 minutes in the Grizzlies' 80-53 win over the SUSC Thunderbirds Dec. 7, scoring 11 points and grabbing five rebounds. But, he had 19 points and eight rebounds in Montana's 61-58 win over Washington State Dec. 10 and scored the game-winning free throws in the final minute.

Montana and Weber State are now the top teams in the Big Sky this year, both with 7-0 records.

Other players nominated for the weekly award were: guards Jeff Epperly of Montana State, Brian Kellerman of Idaho, John Price of Weber State and Eric Wade of Northern Arizona; Idaho State center Mike Williams; and forwards Ron Grossart of Boise State and Sam Mosely of Nevada-Reno.

Ali to fight benefit for Kim

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — Former heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali will fight an exhibition bout later this month in memory of the late South Korean boxer Kim Duk-koo, the Korea Boxing Commission said today.

Ali has proposed that 35 percent of the proceeds from the match be donated to a foundation for Kim, the commission said.

Kim died days after he was pummeled severely and suffered irreversible brain damage in a World Boxing Association lightweight title match against champion Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini in Las Vegas, Nev., Nov. 14.

Ali's eight-round exhibition will be in either Seoul or Pusan, South Korea's second largest city, on Dec. 25 or 26, the commission said.

The commission added that Ali's opponent will be chosen by the former three-time champion from those in the latest WBA heavyweight rankings.

The match is being arranged at the request of Ali, who contacted the South Korean Sports Ministry through the U.S. Embassy in Seoul, the commission said.

It will be Ali's second exhibition match in South Korea. Ali visited Seoul in 1978 as reigning heavyweight champion and fought a promotional match against several primary school boxers.

Walton to have foot checked

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Bill Walton, the part-time center of the San Diego Clippers, is to undergo an extensive examination of his frequently fractured left foot Dec. 21. He will then decide whether to become a full-time NBA player or a full-time law student.

Walton has been trying to play one weekend game each week while attending Stanford University Law School. He has appeared in six games — and the Clippers have lost them all. The Clippers are 4-18 this season.

Clippers Coach Paul Silas, who disclosed the upcoming medical examination, is known to be upset with the once-a-week routine. He discussed the situation with the 6-foot-11 center after San Diego's 124-118 loss at Dallas Saturday night.

He said Walton agreed to join the team full-time in early January, after the end of the semester, if the doctors approve. Walton's podiatrist in Los Angeles will conduct the examination.

Walton attempted to come back this year after a 1½-year layoff caused by the last of several foot fractures.

Mets, Seaver open talks

NEW YORK (UPI) — The New York Mets began negotiations with pitcher Tom Seaver Monday after notifying the baseball commissioner's office that they had reached an agreement with the Cincinnati Reds on the players involved in a trade that would bring the three-time Cy Young Award winner back to New York.

The groundwork for the trade was laid at the baseball meetings in Hawaii last week. As part of the deal, the Mets will give up three players to the Reds, presumably pitcher Charlie Puleo, minor league catcher Lloyd McClendon and another minor league player.

The Mets asked for a "reasonable" period of time to negotiate with Seaver since he comes under baseball's 5-and-10 rule in baseball. This rule specifies that a player with 10 years of experience in the major leagues, the last consecutive five of which were with one club, cannot be traded without his permission.

Wade joins Wimbledon brass

LONDON (UPI) — Virginia Wade has become the first woman to be elected to the Wimbledon Committee of the All-England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club, it was announced Monday.

After the vote at the club's annual meeting, Wade said, "It is absolutely unbelievable. I have dreamed of it, but never thought it could come true."

"It shows, I believe, contrary to what a good many think, just how progressive Wimbledon has become, and I hope I can bring some further progressive thinking to the championships," the 1977 Wimbledon singles champion said.

Kriek wins Australian event

MELBOURNE, Australia (UPI) — Johan Kriek retained his Australian Open singles title Monday by beating Steve Denton 6-3, 6-3, 6-2 in a lopsided match.

Kriek swamped the Texan in 100 minutes to become only the third player to win back-to-back Australian championships.

Kriek, the No. 1 seed, won $72,000 and Denton, the No. 2 seed, earned $36,000.

The final of the $450,000 tournament was a rematch of the 1982 meeting, won by Kriek won in four sets.

Bird is week's best in NBA

NEW YORK (UPI) — Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics Monday was named the National Basketball Association's Player of the Week for the period ending Dec. 12.

The 6-foot-9 forward averaged 33 points, 14.3 rebounds, 3.0 assists and 2.7 steals per game over three games during the week.

It marked the second time this year that Bird has won the award.

THE ACES® BOBBY WOLFF

Dear Mr. Wolff:
I held only four HCP and four card club support. I passed partner's one club opening only to discover that she intended it as a forcing bid. Is a one club opening forcing?

Tight Lips, Albuquerque

ANSWER: A one club opening is forcing only if you have agreed to play an artificial one club forcing system such as The Aces' Club, Precision, Schenecken, etc. In standard systems, one might open club as a convenience bid (three card suit or longer), but responder is at liberty to pass with less than six HCP.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
In duplicate bridge, if a flat hand is dealt at its first play and all players pass, is it permissable to have a redeal?

Second Chance, Dayton, Ohio

ANSWER: No. The Laws of Duplicate Bridge prohibit any redeals of passed out hands. I've seen games bid on hands that others have passed out.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
At rubber bridge, who is responsible for keeping and announcing the score?

Keeping Books, Nashville, Tenn.

ANSWER: Laws 75 and 76 of the 1981 laws state: "The score of each deal must be recorded, and it is preferable that a member of each side should keep score."

"When play of a deal is completed, all four players are equally responsible for ascertaining that the number of tricks won by each side is correctly determined and that all scores are promptly and correctly entered."

No mention is made of any responsibility for announcing the score; equal responsibility should be shared by all players.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
Partner opens one diamond and I respond one spade. Partner rebids two no trump and I rebid spades. Is three spades forcing or is it a signoff?

Missed It, New Orleans

ANSWER: With an absolutely minimum one spade response, you should have passed two no trump, a non-forcing rebid. Failure to do so indicates values to justify game so the three spade bid is forcing.

Years ago, I introduced the Wolff signoff to permit a responder to play at the three level in his suit. With a very poor hand and a long suit, responder bids three clubs after two no trump. Opener is forced to bid three diamonds. Now, a simple rebid in responder's suit may be passed.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
Needing three tricks, what is the best way to play this suit?

West	East
Q 10 8 7	A 9 6 5

Misgursed, Raleigh, N.C.

ANSWER: Play for spit honors, finessing twice against North.

Opening lead: Club king

West's poor result against today's ambitious game was self-inflicted. Sometimes it's necessary to fearlessly lead declarer's suit; more often, it's better to sit and wait.

West's club king was taken by declarer's ace and the club 10 was fired right back. West ducked, but it made no difference. Another club towards dummy and declarer had three club tricks to go with his six top tricks in the other suits.

A much better lead for West is the spade king. It offers a much safer way to attack and avoids the risk of losing an honor in the club suit. East plays a discouraging deuce on West's spade king and declarer ducks (Bath Coup). Whether West shifts to diamonds or hearts doesn't matter. Declarer has only seven top tricks and it's impossible for him to develop two more before the defense collects five.

An opening low club lead seems better but it will not work. Dummy's club seven wins, hearts are run and West is forced to reduce to eight cards. If he discards the spade 10, ace and a low spade promotes declarer's jack to trick No. 9. If West discards a diamond, declarer surrenders a diamond, wins East's spade shift with his ace and cashes his diamond ace. Now the spade jack to West's queen forces another club lead and declarer scores three club tricks.

American Bell outlines data service plans

By GARY KLOTT
United Press International

NEW YORK — American Bell — American Telephone & Telegraph's unregulated subsidiary that formally starts business Jan. 1 — plans to offer customers ways to bank, shop and retrieve information at home on a video screen and an array of smart telephones equipped with digital displays and semiconductor technology.

At a press conference Monday, AT&T officials discussed in general terms some of American Bell's product plans and named Charles Marshall, chairman and chief executive of the new subsidiary. Marshall is the AT&T executive vice president who has overseen the formation of American Bell.

The Federal Communications Commission decision to allow AT&T to enter through a separate subsidiary unregulated markets of computer-augmented communications services and telecommunications equipment, preceded and was unrelated to last January's proposed antitrust settlement with the Justice Department under which AT&T will divest 22 local telephone companies.

The subsidiary allows Bell to enter such growing markets as data processing and information retrieval and for the first time in 26 years a means to sell services in which neither prices nor terms will be subject to government approval.

"For the first time, AT&T can enter the telecommunications marketplace as a full-fledged competitor and offer customers products and services that make unrestricted use of its own technology in ways that have not been permitted in the past," James E. Olson, vice chairman of AT&T, said.

American Bell will be organized into two main divisions: Consumer Products for home and small business customers; and Advanced Information Systems, supplying products and systems for large businesses.

The subsidiary will start with a workforce of 28,000, including 6,000 in the consumer division and 17,000 in the large business division.

Officials said the company would continue to devote great effort to basic telephone products and putting "computer power into the telephone" with semiconductor technology.

Randy Tobias, AT&T vice president of residence marketing who will become president of the Consumer Products division, said developments would include phones with the capability of storing more preprogrammed phone numbers for automatic dialing and phones with digital displays containing such features as calenders and clocks.

Archie J. McGill, AT&T vice president of business marketing who was named president of the Advanced Information division, predicted "a lot of innovation" in the wireless remote telephone.

Tobias also said the company would be moving aggressively into the field of home videotex — "services that use a video display terminal and a keyboard to provide two-way interactive connections with a wide variety of data-base services supplied by a broad spectrum of information providers.

"These services will supply such information as news, education and entertainment information — and perhaps more importantly — they will give customers the capability to shop and bank electronically," he said.

Tobias said American Bell would begin commercially offering customers in South Florida "late next year" the videotex service that AT&T has been experimenting with in Coral Gables, Fla., in partnership with Knight-Ridder newspapers.

Irregular gain for Dow

By FRANK W. SLUSSER
United Press International

NEW YORK — The stock market broke a three-day losing streak by scoring an irregular gain Monday in slow trading that reflected investor uncertainty about the economy and interest rates.

But the market's outlook improved after the close when the Federal Reserve cut its discount loan rate to member banks a half point to 8½ percent because of the weak economy. Some analysts said Brazil's debt problems also could have been a factor.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which lost 38.18 points the previous three sessions, including 9.20 Friday, gained 5.52 to 1,024.28. Most of the jump came in the final 90 minutes of trading.

The New York Stock Exchange index added 0.18 to 80.67 and the price of an average share increased seven cents. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 0.38 to 139.95. But declines edged advances 791-765 among the 1,929 issues traded.

Big Board volume amounted to about 63,140,000 shares, down from the 86,430,000 traded Friday, with many big traders still shocked over last week's setbacks in the wake of disappointing video-game earnings forecasts.

The government reported business inventories declined less than 0.1 percent and business sales dropped 2.2 percent in November. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said he expected no economic growth in the fourth quarter.

Some traders might have stayed out of action to see what effect on the market, if any, of the new high-yielding money fund accounts banks will be able to offer Tuesday.

Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all U.S. exchanges and over the counter totaled 73,981,750 shares compared with 101,499,860 traded Friday.

The American Stock Exchange index rose 0.93 to 335.30 and the price of a share added three cents. Declines topped advances 328-267 among the 838 issues traded. Composite volume totaled 6,860,900 shares compared with 9,223,805 traded Friday.

The National Association of Securities Dealers NASDAQ index of OTC stocks lost 0.52 to 233.33.

On the trading floor, Warner Communications, which plunged 19⅝ points last week on a lower earnings projection, was the most active NYSE-listed issue, up 1½ to 36¼. The company unveiled a new Atari home computer.

Mattel, an 11⅝-point loser last week, was third on the list, up 1⅛ to 18⅝. The company, which expects a fourth-quarter loss, plans to buy a stake in Solid State Scientific.

Among other related high-technology stocks affected in last week's blitz, Texas Instruments rebounded 2⅞ to 137⅞ and Commodore International 2 to 73½.

Sony Corp. was second on the active list, off 1 to 15¼. IBM, a market leader since August, gained 1⅛ to 93⅞ in heavy trading.

American Telephone & Telegraph rose 1⅝ to 61⅝. Charles Marshall was named chairman and chief executive officer of American Bell, the equipment manufacturing firm formed by the breakup of AT&T.

Chrysler added ¼ to 14½. Canadian UAW workers returned to work Monday after approving a new contract that ended a five-week strike over pay.

Rio Grande Industries climbed 2½ to 54½ and Kansas City Southern ⅞ to 49⅝. Analysts said these companies may be the target of takeover bids now that federal courts have cleared the merger of Union Pacific and Missouri Pacific.

Shaklee skidded 2¾ to 37. Reports said the Federal Trade Commission is conducting a probe to see if Shaklee violated a 1974 consent order concerning the marketing of the company's instant protein product.

On the Amex, Instrument Systems was the most active issue, up ¼ to 2. Dome Petroleum followed, up 5-16 to 2 9-16. Champion Home Builders was third, up ⅛ to 5¼.

Bowne & Co. lost 1⅛ to 16¼. The company has lost ground in competition with Pandick Press by resisting modernization, analysts said in a Wall Street Journal article.

Vancouver gets new plant

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — S.E.H America Inc., a semiconductor maker, announced Monday it will build a $30 million manufacturing plant in the first quarter of 1983 that eventually will lead to 250 new jobs in southwest Washington.

The firm produces "high purity silicon which is essential to the rapdily growing U.S. electronic and semiconductor industries," said Tom Rice, executive vice president.

The company, a wholly owned subsidiary of Shin-Etsu Handotai Co. of Tokyo, Japan, will relocate its present 150-employee operation from a leased facility in Vancouver to the new plant, which is expected to be finished by 1984.

Phone service trial set

OTTAWA (UPI) — TransCanada Telephone System members Monday signed an agreement with MCI Telecommunications Corp. of the United States, for a service trial of long-distance telephone calling between Canada and the United States.

"The main advantage to Canadians will be the reduced costs of calling to the United States," TCTS spokesman David Godbold said. "Canadian customers will be billed by their local telephone companies."

TCTS is a consortium of Canada's nine major telephone companies and Telesat Canada.

Subject to approval by regulatory agencies in both countries, a trial service will begin April 1 for U.S. to Canada calls and July 1 for Canada to U.S. calls. The trial is scheduled to last until December 1984.

Latin American fund sought

GENEVA (UPI) — The chief executive of Credit Suisse, one of the "big three" Swiss banks, called Monday for the creation of a special fund to help Latin American nations pay their debts.

Rainer E. Gut said Mexico, Argentina, Brazil and other Latin American countries with large debts "are of primary importance for the free world."

Gut said western governments led by the United States should provide guarantees for additional lending by commercial banks. Credit Suisse would join other banks in providing funds if there were such government guarantees, he said.

The fund should be aimed at helping Latin America rather than heavily-indebted communist countries, he said.

Fed eases pressure on credit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Reserve Board Monday lowered its discount rate for bank borrowing by half a point to 8.5 percent, marking the seventh time since midsummer the agency has eased pressure on credit.

In announcing the change, about 35 minutes after the markets closed, the Fed listed the condition of the economy as the first among several reasons for the move.

"The further half-point reduction in the discount rate was taken in the light of current business conditions, strong competitive pressures on prices and further moderation of cost increases, a slowing of private credit demands and present indications of some tapering off in growth of the broader monetary aggregates," the announcement said.

A lower discount rate can be expected to reinforce a trend toward easier credit for everyone as banks first lower their benchmark prime rate and perhaps eventually their much higher consumer rates.

During October, for instance, the prime rate sank 4 points to 12 percent and then during November went down to the rate prevailing before the latest Fed announcement, 11.5 percent.

As silver price tops $10 an ounce

Sunshine Mine in operation again

KELLOGG (UPI) — Workers were extracting and stockpiling ore Monday at the nation's largest silver mine as officials responded to rising metals prices by reopening the Sunshine Mine after a six-month shutdown.

About 270 workers were called back to their jobs Monday, ending massive layoffs which were ordered by Sunshine officials last spring when silver prices plummeted.

But while most of the recalled workers were on the job for the first time since June 12, mine spokesman Bill Booth said another 200 employees remain off the job.

He said market conditions will determine how soon those workers can resume their jobs at the mine that in 1981 produced more silver than any other in the United States.

"Today marks the first day when the majority of workers are working under normal operating conditions," Booth said Monday.

Recent months have seen silver prices rebound from lows in the $7-per-ounce range to between $10 and $11 in the past month, and officials said price stability and improved productivity would allow continued mining operations into the new year.

Mike Huss, the mine's marketing manager, said recent price hikes, which had increased silver values to $10.38 per ounce on Monday, have been fueled largely by investors responding to reduced interest rates and anticipated economic growth in 1983.

Industrial consumption, which he termed the backbone of the silver market, hasn't increased much in recent months, he said.

Improved productivity at the mine is the key to continued operations, according to Booth. "It just depends on how efficiently we can work," he said.

Booth said several improvements — including repair work underground and installation of new ventilation equipment — were made during the mine's six-month closure that should improve productivity.

"If productivity improves," Booth said, "then we are going to be able to look at opening up other work places."

Workers Monday were extracting ore that was blasted on Friday, but the Sunshine mill, which crushes and chemically treats the ore, probably won't open until after Christmas, Booth said. Until then, ore is being stored underground, he said.

In 1981, the Sunshine Mine produced 4.14 million troy ounces of silver, making it the largest silver producing mine in the U.S.

The company employed 510 people when operations were suspended because of depressed silver prices. The price of silver averaged $7.18 per ounce through the first half of 1982, down 41 percent from the first half of 1981.

As a result, the company suffered a net loss of $5.6 million for the first half of the year, compared with a net income of $1.5 million for the same period of 1981, firm officials said.

New car sales jump forecast for '83

DETROIT (UPI) — New car sales will go up a modest 10 percent next year, the trade publication Automotive News said Monday in its annual industry forecast.

Automotive News predicted sales of new cars next year will total 8.6 million units, compared with an estimated 7.8 million in 1982.

Although the projection indicates some recovery in the domestic auto market, it is not enough to qualify for a real boom, the publication said.

The projection was computed by Automotive News World Outlook, a joint venture between Automotive News and Data Resources Inc.

In its special "Forecast '83" section, Automotive News projected the 1983 market recovery will be gradual, with an annual sales rate of less than 8.1 million units in the first quarter and nearly 8.4 million in the second quarter.

The industry won't crack the 9-million barrier until it achieves a 9.2-million car sales rate in the fourth quarter, Automotive News said.

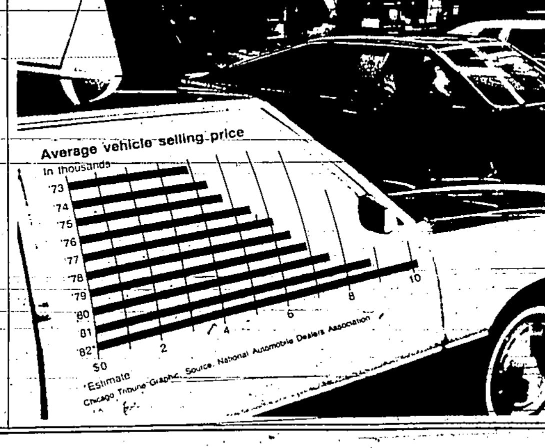
Automotive News also published interviews with four company chairmen with differing opinions about the sales outlook for the coming year.

Some excerpts:

General Motors Corp. Chairman Roger Smith: "We're reasonably confident that a year from now we should be running at an annual (industry) rate of travel of 14 million cars and trucks."

Ford Motor Co. Chairman Philip Caldwell: "After a miserable 1982, following a not very good 1981, to me 1983 will be better.... I'm not looking for a barn-burner next year, but a 10 percent or 15 percent improvement would be welcome."

Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca: "For prudent budget planning, I'd say if it (1983 new car sales) goes up 10 percent to 8.5 million, we're lucky."



Attitudes toward automobiles change during past few years

By BILL SIMMONS
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

It isn't exactly hot-off-the-presses news that Americans' attitudes toward the automobile have changed over the last few years.

It is, however, surprising and a little frightening just how much those attitudes have changed and why.

A statistical survey by Hertz, the car and truck renting and leasing company, reveals that more than two used cars were sold for every new one in the United States last year and that motorists are paying more and getting less in terms of their private transportation.

Hertz says its sample polls show that people buy used cars almost solely because they either can not afford or do not want to spend the money to purchase a new one. And, as the cost of new cars continues to rise, so does the cost of used cars.

The average price of a used car sold in 1981 was $4,218, 11.2 percent higher than the 1980 outlay of $3,794. This was for a typical 3.67-year-old vehicle that had been driven 37,388 miles, compared to the 1980 average of 3.23 years and 32,780. In 1979, the typical used car cost $3,602, was 2.86 years old and had been driven 29,030 miles at the time of purchase.

According to Hertz, the new figures show used-car buyers also are driving less, just as new-car purchasers have been doing, and they are picking older and smaller units to combat rising operating expenses.

The scapegoat in this scenario has been the state of the economy and, to some extent, that is where the problem lies. People out of work or not confident of their job security certainly aren't going to buy new cars. If they absolutely must have a different car, they enter the used-car market at varying levels, depending upon their own financial situation.

But there is more to it than that. If there is almost 11 percent unemployment, there must be almost 89 percent employment. That means for every person unemployed, there are eight-plus gainfully employed.

The auto industry keeps telling the world that, on a percentage basis, it costs no more to buy a car today than it did in 1970 and considerably less than it did in preceding decades.

That may be true, but I have a hard time coming to grips with it. Back in 1960, when I was making all of $5,000 per year, I thought nothing of getting a three-year bank loan so that I could buy a 2-year-old Corvette for $2,800. I was a bachelor living at home, and my expenses were minimal.

Today, a 2-year-old Corvette probably would sell for $10,000. On a percentage basis, my salary has increased much more. I also have the responsibility of my own family and the obligations of a house and, in the near future, college tuitions for three youngsters.

I would no sooner think of paying $10,000 for a 2-year-old Corvette than I would jump out a 10th-floor window. And I'd think long and hard about paying $10,000 for the typical new car.

It has nothing to do with quality or performance or fuel mileage or aesthetics. Today's cars are the best we've ever had and they keep getting better. My problem is one of perception. It hasn't been all that long since

Grain futures

CHICAGO (UPI) — Wheat, corn, oats and soybeans were higher at the close Monday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Wheat was up 1¼ to 2 cents; corn unchanged to up 1½; oats up 1 to unchanged; and soybeans up 2¼ to ½ cent.

Good demand kept prices higher most of the day. The markets generally followed strong gold and interest rate futures to higher levels, however a stronger dollar limited gains.

Expected Mexican business and other tenders for corn and soybeans this week also were supportive, floor sources said.

Professionals were featured buyers in corn and soybeans.

One exporter purchased approximately 5 million bushels of March wheat. A large professional sold 4 million bushels of March and at the same time was an active buyer in the corn and soybean pits.

High water on the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers continued to disrupt traffic. Some elevators on the Illinois River remained closed.

Country movement was slow.

The outside markets were higher.

Cars

you could buy a spanking new Volkswagen for $1,600. Today, the least expensive VW is nearly four times that much. I think many people look at things the same way.

The Hertz study shows that the 1981 average used-car purchase price was $4,218, compared with the new-car average of $7,967. That's a 47 percent difference. Ownership and operating costs range from 23 to 53 percent less for comparable models under similar driving patterns.

A typical 1981 compact purchased new, kept four years and driven 10,000 miles a year, costs 44.6 cents per mile. But the same car, purchased as a 4-year-old unit, kept another four years and also driven 10,000 annual miles, would cost just 23 cents a mile, a savings of 48 percent.

People don't need statistical studies such as the one by Hertz or even a pocket calculator to tell them they are financially better off by buying a used car rather than a new one.

In past years, when new cars cost in the area of $4,000 and interest rates were 5 percent or 6 percent, people bought for the simple reason that they wanted a new car. Most people no longer can afford that luxury.

It was common practice during the 1950s and '60s to trade one's car for a new one every two years after having driven it 20,000 miles or so. The average trade-in in 1982 is 4¼ years old and had been driven 43,711 miles. To understand just how far this trend has progressed, consider that in 1979, the average trade-in car was 2.86 years old with 29,030 on the odometer. That's a three-year increase of 49 percent in age and 51 percent in mileage.

ICC rail rates upheld

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court ruled 9-0 Monday the Interstate Commerce Commission — not federal courts — must determine reasonable railroad rates.

The justices reversed a federal appeals court ruling that threw out an ICC-approved rate for the Burlington Northern, Inc. and Southern Pacific Transportation Co. railroads.

The carriers told the Supreme Court the rate they are allowed to charge for hauling coal from Wyoming to San Antonio is too low.

A federal appeals court threw out rates set in 1978 and 1980 and told the ICC to justify them. The court allowed the rate in 1976 to serve as the interim rate until the case was decided.

The railroads said the lower court's action cost them $19.8 million.

Writing for the court, Chief Justice Warren Burger scolded the appeals court for doing "that which we have said a federal court may not do" — freezing the rate that railroads charge shippers prior to a decision by the commission as to what a reasonable rate should be.

"That approach undermines the commission's ability ... to insure equitable and uniform rates," he said.

He said railroads suffer because they cannot recover losses sustained when an appeals court sets a lower interim rate.

Meet Macro

A new account. A new idea. From a veteran pacesetter.

The new account. MacroSavings. It's revolutionary.
MacroSavings offers you a combination that's never been available before: Money market interest rates and insured safety.

Now you can earn high interest on your savings with no risk at all. Your MacroSavings investment is backed by Idaho's leading bank and insured up to $100,000 by the U.S. Government's Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. No money market fund in the world can make that statement.

Current market rates.
As you might expect, Idaho First monitors market conditions continuously and responds to changes quickly, so your MacroSavings Account will always earn at the most current rate.

Withdrawals anytime.
Your money is as near as your phone. You can make transfers via telephone, withdrawals and deposits via automatic teller machines 24-hours a day. Or, if you're looking for friendly smile, you can drop into your Idaho First office.

A giant of an account.
That's why we call it "macro." It really is revolutionary. Yield is high. Risk is zero. Liquidity is total.

Open your MacroSavings Account at any Idaho First office. Minimum deposit is only $2,500, and the high yield starts immediately. (So don't procrastinate!)

The new idea, MacroBanking. It's revolutionary too.
MacroSavings is more than an account. It's also a sign of what's ahead for Idaho First's customers. It's the first step into a future that promises to be vastly different and potentially more rewarding.

The veteran pacesetter, 115 years of leadership.
Helping their neighbors meet the future is something Idaho First people have been doing ever since the bank first opened its doors in 1867.

And you can rest assured, we're not about to stop now.

Dear Abby

Gay visitor hurts holiday

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: To get right to the point, I'm gay. I am 30 and my lover (I'll call him Bill) is 36. We've lived together for three years — long enough to know that we belong together.

Last summer I introduced Bill to my parents and told them the truth about our relationship. My mother has accepted Bill, but my father barely tolerates him. It's a terrible strain for me to be in my father's company with Bill, although Bill has been very sweet and understanding.

My parents want me to come home for Christmas. (They live in another state.) They said, "Bill is welcome, too." He will accompany me if I ask him to, but I'm afraid Dad will act cool and unfriendly again.

I'd like to spend Christmas with my parents, but I also want to be with Bill. What should I do?

— TOUGH DECISION

DEAR TOUGH: Since your mother appears more willing to accept the realities of your lifestyle, call and ask her if she thinks your father will have difficulty handling a visit from you and Bill.

To subject someone you care about to a chilly reception, followed by a strained and uncomfortable Christmas, would be both unwise and unkind.

DEAR ABBY: We are a retired couple living in Florida. My wife doesn't like to spend money on the Daytona Beach Journal, so she gets a used copy from friends. The trouble is that these friends cut coupons and articles out of the newspaper before we get it.

I realize it's their paper, and it's their right to clip out whatever they want, but sometimes I don't get to finish an article from an earlier page and very often your column is missing entirely!

Although we are old friends, they make jokes about our living on "the wrong side of the river." (They mean "tracks.")

Perhaps if you were to tell my wife that a newspaper is not an extravagance, she might agree that we should buy our own.

Also, you might suggest that our friends be a little less cruel to those whose limited income forces them to live on "the wrong side of the river."

— MIFFED IN FLORIDA

DEAR MIFFED: Since both you and your wife enjoy the daily newspaper, why not treat yourselves to a subscription as a mutual Christmas gift? That way you'll get the newspaper intact without having to rely on the generosity of friends.

And for the cruel remarks masked as humor: For maximum effectiveness, your friends need to hear any suggestions from YOU.

DEAR ABBY: I am an inmate at the Attica Correctional Facility in New York. Now that the Christmas season is upon us, I have a small favor to ask.

Will you please ask your readers to send a card to someone they know in prison? There are many of us here who would love to hear from our relatives and old friends.

It would mean so much to know that we haven't been forgotten. A card or note during the holiday season would really give us a tremendous lift.

Merry Christmas, Abby, and may the good Lord bless you.

— BILL

Coffee mix

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (UPI) — A popular liqueur flavor now is available in a non-alcoholic instant coffee mix. Cafe Amaretto is the sixth in General Foods' International Coffees line. It tastes more like almonds than coffee. The product is premixed, ready to be reconstituted with boiling water. Each metal container holds enough for 20 servings.

Dr. Lamb

Temperature birth control helpful

By LAWRENCE LAMB, M.D.
Newspaper Enterprise Association

DEAR DR. LAMB — In one of your columns you had a letter from a woman who wrote about temperature birth control. The birth control pamphlet from my doctor was put out by an oral contraceptive company and was very biased, giving little information on any other system.

I'm 22 and can't take the pill. I'm leery of IUDs because of an infection susceptibility. Abstaining from sex during the last two weeks of my cycle has managed to keep me pregnancy free (I've had two children) but this is obviously not ideal. Could you please explain the temperature system?

DEAR READER — It is based on the sequential events of the cycle. Just after the ovum is released the follicle in the ovary that supplied the ovum becomes a small yellowish body. This is the corpus luteum. It provides progesterone, which is essential to pregnancy. The corpus luteum must supply female hormones in an excess amount until the stage of pregnancy when the placenta is formed and takes over the job.

Of course, if you don't get pregnant the corpus luteum degenerates and the whole cycle starts over again.

Progesterone causes the basal temperature to rise from 0.3 to 0.8 degrees Fahrenheit. It is this rise that you can see on a daily temperature chart that tells you ovulation has taken place. Now notice the words "has taken." It means that when the rise occurs it is too late to abstain from intercourse. Ovulation has already occurred.

Nevertheless, you can use the daily chart to plot your cycles and there is a tiny dip in temperature just before ovulation so it does help in birth control. But don't expect too much.

There are other signs that you can add to your observations that help, including changes in mucus. I am sending you The Health Letter 17-2, Female Reproductive Function, to brief you. Others send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Can you explain to me what a hairy tongue is and what causes it? I was unable to find out from my doctor and he doesn't seem to help.

DEAR READER — Your tongue is covered with a specialized "skin" and its superficial cells die and scale off just like your regular skin. These keratinized cells pile up on your tongue and are the basis for a white-coated tongue people normally have. And these cells can be stained with coffee and tobacco.

When the little projections called papillae on the tongue become elongated and covered with these cells, the tongue appears to have hair on it, and it is usually brown or black, hence, the black hairy tongue. In rare cases they can be so long that a patient can actually comb the projections but they are not hair.

Such cases may occur from the use of penicillin lozenges. In other cases they are from smoking and poor mouth hygiene.

Colonies of yeast organisms may grow on the elongated papillae.
